The accusation made in this article fails to properly allege a high crime or misdemeanor within the meaning of Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution of the United States and so far departs from the standards of fair pleading, as established in prior impeachments and in contemporary criminal practice, as to render it impossible for Judge Hastings to frame an adequate response or to prepare to defend himself at trial. Specifically, the accusation is so lacking in specification and particulars as to deny Judge Hastings a meaningful opportunity to respond and to deprive him of his right to prepare to defend himself at trial. This article should be dismissed or, in the alternative and at a minimum, the Senate should require the House to file and provide either an amended article or a bill of particulars providing detail, if it can, of the allegations encompassed within the accusation made in this article sufficient to enable Judge Hastings to prepare his defense and the Senate fairly to judge the accusation made and intended.

Second Affirmative Defense to Article I

Prosecution by the House and trial by the Senate on the accusation made in this article, is and should be precluded by the 1983 trial and verdict of the jury in United States v. Hastings, a case in which Judge Hastings was tried and acquitted on an accusation of crime alleged in this article, and by the lapse of seven years since the information necessary to investigate the accusation made in this article was or should have been known to the House and more than five years since the substance of that accusation was fully tried and the evidence recorded in public records that were readily available to the House.

Third Affirmative Defense to Article I

The conduct of the investigations against Judge Hastings over the past seven years into the accusation made in this article has so far departed from the essential requirements of fairness and so directly undermined the conditions necessary to maintain the necessary independence of federal judges as to require that the article be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

ARTICLES II THROUGH IV

Answer to Article II

Judge Hastings admits that he was the defendant in the criminal case described in this article and that, in the course of the trial of that case, he took the stand and testified under oath. He also admits that he testified, in substance, that he never made any agreement with William Borders to solicit a bribe from the defendants in United States v. Romano, a case that had been tried before him. Answer to Article III

Judge Hastings admits that he was the defendant in the criminal case described in this article and that, in the course of the trial of that case, he took the stand and testified under oath. He also admits that he testified, in substance, that he had never agreed with William Borders to modify the sentences of defendants in United States v. Romano, a case that has been tried before him, from a term of imprisonment to probation in return for a bribe from those defendants. Judge Hastings denies that the substance of this statement was false or intended to mislead the triers of fact and states that it was true and was made to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. Judge Hastings denies any allegations that this article might otherwise be construed as having made or implied which are inconsistent with the foregoing response.

He also admits that he testified, in substance, that he never agreed with William Borders, in connection with a bribe, to enter an order returning a substantial amount of property to the defendants in United States v. Romano, a case tried before him in which he had previously ordered that property forfeit. Judge Hastings denies that the substance of this statement was false or intended to mislead the triers of fact and states that it was true and was made to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. Judge Hastings denies any allegations that this article might otherwise be construed as having made or implied which are inconsistent with the foregoing response.

Third Affirmative Defense to Articles II through IV

The conduct of the investigations against Judge Hastings over the past five years into the accusations made in these articles has so far departed from the essential requirements of fairness and so directly undermined the conditions necessary to maintain the necessary independence of federal judges as to require that these articles be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

ARTICLES V THROUGH IX

Answer to Article V

Judge Hastings admits that he was the defendant in the criminal case described in this article and that, in the course of the trial of the case, he took the stand and testified under oath. He also admits that he testified, in substance, that his appearance at the Fontainebleu Hotel on September 16, 1981, was an innocent act and was not a part of a plan to demonstrate his participation in a bribery scheme with William Borders concerning United States v. Romano, a case tried before him. Judge Hastings admits that he testified that William Borders had told Judge Hastings that William Borders would be at the Fontainebleu on September 16, 1981, and had invited the judge to dine with him. Judge Hastings denies that the substance of his statements concerning the event described in this article was false or intended to mislead the triers of fact and states that it was true and was made to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. Judge Hastings denies that his instructions to Mr. Miller on October 5, 1981 or his motives in giving those instructions were related to the furtherance of a bribery scheme concerning the Romano case. Judge Hastings denies that the substance of the statements on this topic was false or intended to mislead the triers of fact and states that they were true and were made to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. The remaining allegations set forth in this article are so vague and ambiguous as to preclude further response. In any event, Judge Hastings denies any allegations that this article might otherwise be construed as having made or implied which are inconsistent with the foregoing response.

Answer to Article VIII

Judge Hastings admits that he was the defendant in the criminal case described in this article and that, in the course of the trial of that case, he took the stand and testified under oath. He also admits that he testified, in substance, that his October 5, 1981, telephone conversation with William Borders was in fact about writing letters to solicit assistance for Hemphill Pride of Columbia, South Carolina. Judge Hastings denies that his conversation concerned or was in furtherance of a conspiracy with William Borders to solicit a bribe from defendants in United States v. Romano, a case tried before Judge Hastings. Judge Hastings denies that the substance of his statement was false or intended to mislead the triers of fact and states that it was true and was made to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. ARTICLES X THROUGH XIII

Answer to Articles X through XIII

Judge Hastings admits that he was the defendant in the criminal case described in this article and that, in the course of the trial of that case, he took the stand and testified under oath. Judge Hastings admits that, in the course of his testimony at trial, he testified, in substance, that:

a. On May 5, 1981, he had talked with Hemphill Pride by placing a telephone call to 803-758-8825 in Columbia, South Carolina (article X);

b. On August 2, 1981, Judge Hastings talked to Hemphill Pride by placing a call to 803-782-9387 in Columbia, South Carolina (article XI);

c. On September 2, 1981, Judge Hastings talked to Hemphill Pride by placing a telephone call to 803-758-8825 in Columbia, South Carolina (article XII); and

d. The telephone number 803-777-7716 was the number of a telephone at a place where Hemphill Prie could be contacted in July 1981 (article XIII). Judge Hastings admits that the statements that the specific telephone numbers identified in these articles were the numbers of telephones on which he talked with Hemphill Pride or that were at locations at which Hemphill Pride could be reached were false. He denies, however, that he had knowledge that any of the statements was false at the time he made it and states that he believed each of them to be true at the time he made it. He also denies that he intended any of these statements to mislead the triers of fact and states that they were intended, at the time they were made, to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. Judge Hastings denies any allegations that this article might otherwise be construed as having made or implied which are inconsistent with the foregoing response.

First Affirmative Defense to Articles X through XIII

The accusations made in these articles fail to properly allege a high crime or misdemeanor within the meaning of Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution and so far depart from the standards of fair pleading, as established in prior impeachments and in contemporary criminal practice, as to render it impossible for Judge Hastings to frame an adequate response or to prepare to defend himself at trial. These articles should be dismissed or, in the alternative and at a minimum, the Senate should require the House to file and provide either amended articles or a bill of particulars providing detail, if it can, of the allegations encompassed within the accusations made in these articles sufficient to enable Judge Hastings to prepare his defense and the Senate to judge fairly the accusation made and intended.

Second Affirmative Defense to Articles X through XIII

Prosecution by the House and trial by the Senate on the accusations made in these articles is and should be precluded by the 1983 trial and verdict of the jury in United States v. Hastings, a case in which Judge Hastings was tried and acquitted and in which the prosecutors had a full and fair opportunity to develop the accusations made in these articles and argue to the triers of fact their relevence to the claim that Judge Hastings was guilty of the crime for which he was tried. The House should not be permitted to collaterally attack the verdict of the jury or to collaterally impeach Judge Hastings's testimony by now asserting claims that the prosecutors failed to present at the 1983 trial, whether for tactical reasons or through inadvertence or neglect. Prosecution by the House and trial by the Senate on the accusations made in these articles is and should be further precluded by the lapse of more than five years since the information necessary to investigate and prosecute the accusations made in these articles was or should have been known and available to the House and since the trial at which the evidence that was presented was more than sufficient to enable the House to determine then whether further inquiry was merited.

Third Affirmative Defense to Articles X through XIII

The conduct of the investigations against Judge Hastings over the past five years into the accusations made in these articles has so far departed from the essential requirements of fairness and so directly undermined the conditions necessary to maintain the necessary independence of federal judges as to require that the articles be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

ARTICLE XIV

Answer to Article XIV

Judge Hastings admits that he was the defendant in the criminal case described in this article and that, in the courage of the trial of that case, he took the stand and testified under oath. He also admits that he testified, in substance, that, on the afternoon of October 9, 1981, Judge Hastings called his mother and Patricia Williams from his hotel room at the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel in Washington, D.C. Judge Hastings denies that the substance of these statements was false or intended to mislead the triers of fact and states that these statements were, at the time they were made, true to the best of his recollection and brief and were made to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. Judge Hastings denies any allegations that this article might otherwise be construed as having made or implied which are inconsistent with the foregoing response.

First Affirmative Defense to Article XIV

The accusation made in this article fails to properly allege a high crime or misdemeanor within the meaning of Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution and so far departs from the standards of fair pleading, as established in prior impeachments and in contemporary criminal practice, as to render it impossible for Judge Hastings to frame an adequate response or to prepare to defend himself at trial. Third Affirmative Defense to Article XIV

The conduct of the investigations against Judge Hastings over the past five years into the accusation made in this article has so far departed from the essential requirements of fairness and so directly undermined the conditions necessary to maintain the necessary independence of federal judges as to require that the article be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

ARTICLE XV

Answer to Article XV

Judge Hastings admits that he was the defendant in the criminal case described in this article and that, in the course of the trial of that case, he took the stand and testified under oath. He also admits that he testified concerning his motives for taking a plane on October 9, 1981, from Baltimore-Washington International Airport rather than from Washington National Airport. Judge Hastings denies that the substance of his testimony on this point was false or intended to mislead the triers of fact and states that his testimony on this point, at the time it was given, was true to the best of his recollection and belief and was made to enable the jury to reach a true verdict. Judge Hastings denies any allegations that this article might otherwise be construed as having made or implied which are inconsistent with the foregoing response.

First Affirmative Defense to Article XV

The accusation made in this article fails to properly allege a high crime or misdemeanor within the meaning of Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution and so far departs from the standards of fair pleading, as established in prior impeachments and in contemporary criminal practice, as to render it impossible for Judge Hastings to frame an adequate response or to prepare to defend himself at trial. This article should be dismissed or, in the alternative and at a minimum, the Senate should require the House to file and provide either an amended article or a bill of particulars providing detail, if it can, or the allegations encompassed within the accusation made in this article sufficient to enable Judge Hastings to prepare his defense and the Senate to judge fairly the accusation made and intended.

Second Affirmative Defense to Article XV

Prosecution by the House and trial by the Senate on the accusation made in this article is and should be precluded by the 1983 trial and verdict of the jury in *United States v. Third Affirmative Defense to Article XV

The conduct of the investigations against Judge Hastings over the past five years into the accusation made in this article has so far departed from the essential requirements of fairness and so directly undermined the conditions necessary to maintain the necessary independence of federal judges as to require that the article be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

ARTICLE XVI

Answer to Article XVI

Judge Hastings admits the allegations made in the first two paragraphs of this article. Judge Hastings denies the allegations set forth in the third paragraph of this article. Judge Hastings lack information sufficient to form a fair belief concerning the truth of the allegations set forth in the fourth paragraph of this article and, on that basis, but without conceding their relevance or materiality, he denies them. Judge Hastings denies any allegations that this article might otherwise be construed as having made or implied which are inconsistent with the foregoing response.

First Affirmative Defense to Article XVI

The accusation made in this article fails to properly allege a high crime or misdemeanor within the meaning of Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution and so far departs from the standards of fair pleading, as established, in prior impeachments and in contemporary criminal practice, as to render it impossible for Judge Hastings to frame an adequate response or to prepare to defend himself at trial. Specifically, the accusation is so lacking in specification and particulars as to deny Judge Hastings a meaningful opportunity to respond and to deprive him of his right to prepare to defend himself at trial. This article should be dismissed or, in the alternative and at a minimum, the Senate should require the House to file and provide either an amended article or a bill of particulars providing detail, if it can, of the allegations encompassed within the accusation made in this article sufficient to enable Judge Hastings to prepare his defense and the Senate to fairly judge the accusation made and intended.

Second Affirmative Defense to Article XVI

The conduct of the investigations against Judge Hastings over the past three years into the accusation made in this article has so far departed from the essential requirements of fairness and so directly undermined the conditions necessary to maintain the necessary independence of federal judges as to require that the article be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

ARTICLE XVII

Answer to Article XVII

Judge Hastings admits that he is a federal judge within the meaning of Article III, Section 1, of the Constitution. Judge Hastings admits that, by virtue of his oath and his office, he is required to uphold and obey the Constitution and laws of the United States. Judge Hastings states that the remaining allegations set forth in this article are defective in two ways—they fail to state the House's accusations with sufficient particularity to enable him to respond and they fail to state a separate offense constituting a high crime or misdemeanor within the meaning of Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution. Without waiving his rights to challenge this article on the basis of the defects specified or otherwise, Judge Hastings denies the allegations of fact and the conclusions of law set forth in this article to the exent that they are inconsistent with the facts admitted in the first two sentences of his answer to this article.

First Affirmative Defense to Article XVII

The accusation made in this article fails to properly allege a high crime or misdemeanor within the meaning of Article II, Section 4 of the Constitution and so far departs from the standards of fair pleading, as established in prior impeachments and in contemporary criminal practice, as to render it impossible for Judge Hastings to frame an adequate response or to prepare to defend himself at trial. Specifically, the accusation is so lacking in specification and particulars as to deny Judge Hastings a meaningful opportunity to respond and to deprive him of his right to prepare to defend himself at trial. This article should be dismissed or, in the alternative and at a minimum, the Senate should require the House to file and provide either an amended article or a bill of particulars providing detail, if it can, of the allegations encompassed within the accusation made in this article sufficient to enable Judge Hastings to prepare his defense and the Senate to judge fairly the accusation made and intended.

Second Affirmative Defense to Article XVII

The inclusion of this article represents an improper attempt by the House to undermine the integrity and function of the Senate in the conduct and adjudication of trials of impeachments in two ways. The article asks the Senate to ignore the standard mandated by the Constitution, that removal of an article III judge shall only take place upon conviction for "Treason, Bribery, or other high Crimes and Misdemeanors", and to substitute therefore a nebulous political standard that would permit impeachment and removal upon a finding that a judge had failed "to avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety" and had acted "to undermine confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary" and thereby to substitute a form of political joint address that the framers rejected as inconsistent with maintaining "the necessary independence of a judicial character." Moreover, House seeks by this article to establish again its right to combine multiple accusations in a single article in a manner calculated to induce cumulative voting by Senate in order to obtain a single conviction in impeachments where the House fails to offer evidence sufficient to satisfy the Senate that the accused was guilty of any of the specific crimes alleged. The accusation made in this article so far departs from the standards mandated by the Constitution as to require that it be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

Third Affirmative Defense to Article XVII

The inclusion of this article provides further confirmation that the conduct of the investigations against Judge Hastings over the past seven years into the accusations subsumed and combined in this article and separately stated in the prior article have so far departed from the essential requirements of fairness and so directly undermined the conditions necessary to maintain the necessary independence of federal judges as to require that the article be dismissed by the Senate without trial.

Respectfully submitted on September 8, 1988,

The Honorable Alcee L. Hastings, a Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, by and through his counsel
John W. Karr.
Terence J. Anderson.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may I inquire of the distinguished Republican leader if he has any further requests or any statement he would like to make?

Mr. DOLE. We have no further requests except I think the Senator from Arizona [Mr. McCain] would like 3 to 5 minutes in morning business.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that morning business be extended for 30 minutes and that Mr. McCain be recognized during that period so that he may speak therein, Mr. Levin may speak during that period, and that upon yielding of the floor by those two Senators not later than 3:30 p.m. today the Chair recess the Senate over until Monday under the order previously entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I would not want any Senator who came to the floor to be shut out by virtue of this order. If any Senator wishes to speak in morning business, I hope that he would call the cloakroom of his respective party and inform the leadership. Then I would ask unanimous consent that the order just entered be enlarged so as to accommodate that Senator for not to exceed 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without rejection, it is so ordered.

GAS WARFARE AND THE PROLIFERATION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION: THE NEED FOR AMERICAN ACTION

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I believe I join all my colleagues in condemning Iraq's use of poison gas. I do not believe that our opposition to Iran's fanatic ambitions in the Iran-Iraq war, and to dominate Islam, lead any of us to believe this Nation should excuse or ignore Iraq's use of poison gas.

THE IRAQI DRIFT TOWARD MURDER AND GENOCIDE

I do not believe that there is a single Member of the Senate who believes that Iraq was justified in using poison gas for military purposes. War is horrible enough without adding another weapon of mass destruction to the appalling total of killing mechanisms available to modern armies. This is particularly true when the weapon is one whose effects may last for decades and lead to a slow and painful death years after the conflict in question is over.

What is even more horrifying, however, is that Iraq has used poison gas in areas where it knew Iranian civilians would suffer, and is now using poison gas in a genocidal campaign against its Kurdish minority.

We already have seen a steady increase in the willingness of both Governments and armed movements to make civilians, including women and children, the target of military action and terrorism. We have only to think of Cambodia, the long agony of Lebanon, or the current atrocities in Burundi, to realize that the murderous heritage of World War II continues in many parts of the world.

The introduction of poison gas, however, adds a new and even more horrifying dimension to this process of total war. It is one thing to see ethnic and tribal conflicts explode into hatred and violence. It is another thing to see weapons of mass destruction used methodically in continuing acts of cold-blooded murder.

Iraq has plainly embarked upon this course. For all its evasions, and its night and fog approach to trying to hide the facts, it is patently clear that thousands of innocent people are being murdered solely because of their ethnic group.

Mr. President, I wonder if they were not Kurds whether we would not be a lot more exercised than we are at this time.

AMERICA'S STRATEGIC INTERESTS IN CONDEMNING THE USE OF POISON GAS AND THE PROLIFERATION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

It is true that the Kurds are half a world away, it is true that some Kurds have conducted a state of civil war filled with acts of terrorism and the murder of other civilians, and it is true that the Kurds have become a pawn of history whose only strategic value lies in the ability to use them against the governments of the nations where they reside. This in no way, however, excuses what is happening or can lead us to turn away from the fact that mass murder is mass murder.

Further, we need to take a longer term view of the strategic threat that the use of poison gas and weapons of mass destruction pose to our interests. This is true whether we define that long term interest in terms of our relations with Iraq, our position in the gulf, or the search for stability and development within the Third World.

THE NEED FOR THE RIGHT KIND OF RELATIONS WITH IRAQ

In the most narrow sense, we want to establish friendly relations with Iraq. We have every interest in seeing a strong, independent, and secular buffer state in the northern gulf. We have every interest in encouraging Iraq to become more moderate, to expand its trade ties with the West, and to become a developed nation.

We will do nothing, however, to build a stable and lasting relationship by turning a blind eye to genocide. We must be prepared to confront Iraq every time it departs from a moderate course. We must not tolerate any return to the support of terrorism, and we must do everything in our power to deter it from its present use of poison gas.

THE NEED TO ENCOURAGE STRATEGIC STABILITY IN THE GULF REGION

As for our position in the gulf, we need to recognize that a strong and indpendent Iran is as important to our strategic interests as a strong and independent Iraq. Our quarrel with Iran is not its choice of governments, but the fact that Government has sought to subvert or conquer other states by force, and has perverted and twisted Islam into the glorification of fanaticism. The moment Iran turns away from subversion and conquest, it is in our interest to encourage the development of a state that is strong enough to preserve its own security and any relations that will lead to the development of a more moderate and less repressive regime.

We need to recognize that the end of the Iran-Iraq war leaves no pro-Western "pillars" in the region. Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, and Saudi Arabia are friendly states, but they are relatively weak and cannot either formally grant us bases or assume the role of defending an area with over half the world's proven oil reserves. Our "over-the-horizon" reinforcement capabilities must be the last, not the first, resort in ensuring the flow of oil.

The key factor that can bring stability to the region is the kind of balance between Iraq and Iran that will checkmate any ambitions either state has to dominate its neighbor or the gulf. This, however, means that we must be as willing to condemn the use of poison gas by Iraq as we are to condemn Khomeini's butchery of hundreds of thousands of his own youth in a pointless attempt at conquest.

We cannot afford to isolate Iran, or let Iraq threaten any other nation with acts of genocide. The end result would be to give Sadam Hussein the same powers we have denied Khomeini, and risk changing Iran from an independent state that acts as a buffer between East and West and a checkmate to Iraq, to a nation which is forced to turn to the Soviet Union or which becomes too weak to help stabilize the region.

THE NEED TO FIGHT THE PROLIFERATION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION WHILE WE STILL CAN

We also need to realize that it we ignore limited use of poison gas now, or the broader proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, we will ultimately license massive threats to our friends, our strategic interests, our own forces, and ultimately our own territory.

Iraq's use of poison gas has already accelerated the efforts of other nations to create major stockpiles of such weapons. Iran is actively engaged in creating its own production facilities, as is Syria. Many nations throughout the Third World have reactivated research efforts in this area, and some may well be moving toward the production and stockpiling of such weapons.

There can be no question that the use of poison gas is also accelerating efforts to develop low cost biological weapons, and is interacting with efforts at nuclear proliferation. The moment the international community tolerates Iraq's use of poison gas, it tacitly tolerates the use of small nuclear weapons or biological agents like the mycotoxins. It also encourages every Third World nation to find its own cheapest path to obtaining weapons of mass destruction, regardless of type.

We also have already seen a friendly state like Saudi Arabia turn to the PRC for the kind of IRBM whose only military merit lies in the eventual acquisition of chemical, biological, and/or nuclear warheads. We have seen Israel, Egypt, and Syria all renew their own search for long-range missiles, and this is only the tip of the iceberg. For all its ritual denials, the PRC has become actively involved in selling long-range missiles and it has been joined by nations like Brazil.

If we let poison gas be used against the Kurds today, it will almost certainly be used against Israel or Saudi Arabia in the years to come, and eventually against our own forces in some low-level conflict. More broadly, however, we will repeat the mistakes the world made in tolerating Japanese use of poison gas against the Chinese, Italy's use of poison gas against Ethiopia, or Germany's experiments in the use of airpower to destroy civilians at Guernica, and Neville Chamberlain's indifference to the people of Czechoslovakia.

No part of the world has been far enough away for us to safely ignore for more than half a century. If we allow Iraq's example to fester and breed, and to contaminate the world, we will eventually reap the whirlwind. We will find ourselves in a world where every major regional conflict and tension leads to a new kind of proliferation. Ultimately, we will find ourselves thrust into one of these conflicts and ultimately, we will be the target.

Admittedly, we ourselves are still dependent on nuclear and chemical weapons for deterrence, and cannot ignore the need for research in biological warfare. We also, however, are beginning to make real progress in moving toward the reduction or elimination of these weapons and we have a quarter of a century's experience in guiding us to avoid their use. The proliferation of weapons of mass destruction is not a sane form of nationalism in the Third World, and it may ultimately destroy the validity of our own efforts at arms control.

TAKING ACTION TO HALT THE PROLIFERATION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

The question is what we can do about the process. It is obvious that mere protests and resolutions will do little, if anything. At the same time, we have learned through our efforts in regard to the Non-Proliferation Treaty that we cannot simply force our will on other nations through threats.

I believe, therefore, that we should adopt a three point program that does not single out Iraq, but which attacks the problem on a global basis and which addresses the proliferation of all the elements of weapons of mass destruction: chemical weapons, nuclear weapons, biological weapons, and advanced delivery systems.

COMPREHENSIVE REPORTING ON THE PROLIFERATION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

The first step should be the kind of report on the proliferation of such weapons that goes far beyond the kind of summary report that is common in the U.S. Government. To be specific, the President should be required to issue an annual report on each country in the world that is deliberately designed to embarrass the buyers and sellers of mass destruction in detail.

In the case of the buyers, it should require that the President report on the current activities of each Third World country in trying to develop or acquire chemical weapons, nuclear weapons, biological weapons, and missiles or other delivery systems suited for the use of such weapons. This legislation should require the disclosure of any holding and stockpiles of such weapons, and that the U.S. name the responsible officials in each country. It should cut through the vagueness and hypocrisy in most such reports, and deliberately shame the nations involved in the eyes of world opinion.

Further, the President should be required to notify the Congress in unclassified form of any major development in acquiring weapons of mass destruction by any country in the world within 30 days of the confirmation of such developments.

In the case of the sellers, the President should be required to provide a similar report any country, company, or individual selling weapons or technology which can be, or is, used to develop weapons of mass destruction. Once again, this report should name names. It should name the responsible official or officials in any seller country, the firms involved, and the individuals involved. Further, the President should be required to provide notification to the Congress of such sales within 30 days.

SANCTIONS AGAINST NATIONS ACQUIRING WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

The second step should be to take more tangible steps to act on this report. In the case of any Third World nation that is acquiring weapons of mass destruction, we should make it firmly clear that the United States will not extend any form of credit, aid, or technology transfer in any form to a nation that is acquiring such weapons for the first time, or adding to its present stockpile, for a period of 5 years after the most recent Presidential notification of such action, and will halt support to any international institution that will provide such aid.

Further, we should maintain a public international "blacklist" of the officials and individuals in a country that are involved in acquiring weapons of mass destruction, and permanently deny them visas to the United States. This would brand those responsible for life, and end the kind of personal secrecy that is an essential part of today's efforts at proliferation.

SANCTIONS AGAINST NATIONS SELLING WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

Finally, we must take equally firm action against the seller. We cannot shut off all trade with other nations for selling such weapons and technology, but we can target several key aspects of our relations. One is to deny technology transfer for all military technology. Another is to deny all forms of aid and credits, including both civil and military.

We also can target the selling firms to force them to divest any holdings in the use and to prevent any goods containing any component they manufacture from being imported to the United States. We can demand that they be blacklisted from any overseas contracts involving U.S. aid or international aid to which we contribute, and we can demand that this blacklisting be so broadly defined that it includes the parent company, any company with any holding of any kind in the selling company, and any company with agreements for technical or financial cooperation on an international level.

We also should expand the international blacklist on entry to the United States to include sellers, and establish much harsher criminal penalties to any Americans that may violate U.S. law in these areas.

THE NEED TO BE FIRM WITH OUR FRIENDS AS WELL AS OUR ENEMIES

These measures may not prevent the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, but they will make it far more difficult and put far more pressure on other nations to halt the new arms race toward weapons of mass destruction. They will establish a firm basis for seeking support for similar policies from our NATO allies, the PRC, and the Soviet bloc. They will greatly strengthen the many people in the Third World who fully recognize the dangers of such action, and that the Third World does not need to repeat the mistakes of the West and East.

We must, however, recognize that we cannot play favorites. We cannot condemn Iraq or the PRC and ignore the actions of Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, or Israel. We cannot deal in cliches or half truths, or excuse our own firms or the actions of our major Western allies. We must act firmly and decisively, and leave no ambuguity or uncertainty on the part of other nations as to the firmness of our response. We cannot hope to be successful in safeguarding our most vital long-term interests if we are willing to take short-term advantage of failing to be honest about what friendly nations are doing.

THE AGENDA FOR ACTION

We cannot hope to do more than acknowledge the problem as we move toward adjournment and a Presidential election. We lack the time for the kind of hearings and careful drafting of legislation that will be vital in making such legislation successful.

Nevertheless, as we move toward adjournment, I believe that as many Members of this body and the House as possible should condemn Iraq for what are clearly crimes against humanity. Further, regardless of the outcome of the Presidential election, I feel it is clear that we need to act early in the new year to hold hearings on the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and to take firm and decisive legislative action. I will be discussing how to best take this action with Senator Nunn and Senator Warner of the Senate Armed Services Committee and I sincerely hope that the House will join us in this effort.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the Record, Senate Resolution 408, which I submitted.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. Res. 408

Whereas the international community recognized the dangers of chemical warfare during World War One, in which at least 90,000 were killed and well over 1,000,000 wounded by chemical weapons;

Whereas the 1925 Geneva Protocol outlawed the use of chemical weapons;

Whereas United Nations investigators concluded in 1984, 1986, and 1987 that Iraq had employed chemical weapons, and the United Nations Security Council has condemned the use of chemical weapons in the Iran-Iraq war;

Whereas Iraq's chemical weapons attack on March 16, in which hundreds of Kurdish civilians were killed on Iraqi soil, underscores the horror of these weapons and their impact on noncombatants;

Whereas the United States condemned that Iraqi attack as a "particularly grave violation" of international law; and

Whereas it has been reported that Iran may be producing chemical weapons, and Iran has also used chemical weapons in retaliation for Iraqi use of such weapons: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) condemns the use of chemical weapons by Iraq and declares that such action violates international law;

(2) calls upon Iraq to halt immediately and permanently the use of all chemical weapons;

(3) commends the President for his prompt condemnation of Iraq's recent chemical weapons attack on civilians;

(4) urges the President to seek allied cooperation to further tighten controls on the export of chemical compounds to countries seeking to develop a chemical weapons capability;

(5) expresses concern about reported Iranian use of chemical weapons and urges the President to make appropriate diplomatic efforts to prevent Iran from developing or using chemical weapons; and

(6) urges the President to pursue American efforts at the Geneva Conference on Disarmament to reach an arms control agreement banning the use, production, development, stockpiling, transfer, and acquisition of chemical weapons.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SDI

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on SDI, Star Wars, George Bush got it wrong again today. The issue is not who does or who does not believe in ballistic missile defense research. The question is does George Bush believe in scrapping the ABM Treaty.

Mike Dukakis' position on SDI is right on the mark: we should pursue a research effort to further explore antiballistic missile technologies and hedge against a Soviet breakout from the ABM Treaty.

What we cannot afford to do is to jump to the Vice President's conclusion that we must deploy SDI. He has flatly stated his commitment to deploy SDI three times in the last 7 months.

His position would force us to dump our most effective arms control treaty to date in the blind pursuit of a program whose own directors say will cost $45 billion over the next 5 years just to let us know whether or not it is technically feasible to proceed.

But maybe the Vice President does not understand that. Maybe he is confused.

If he cannot tell the difference between December and September, maybe he does not know that the ABM Treaty bans the deployment that has repeatedly committed himself to.

It appears that he does not, for in a March article in Arms Control Today, the Vice President wrote, "We must vigorously pursue development and testing of SDI and as soon as it is ready, it must be deployed. We should abide by the ABM Treaty," he wrote.

Let me repeat: Under either the broad or narrow interpretation of the ABM Treaty, deployment of SDI-type systems is not allowed. It is GEORGE BUSH who has some SDI explaining to do. Yes or no, Mr. President, yes or no. Are you going to abandon the ABM Treaty in pursuit of the deployment of SDI? And if so, how are you going to pay for the SDI Program, which you advocate?

As far as I can tell, GEORGE BUSH's SDI policy is full speed ahead, the ABM Treaty be damned and the budget be busted.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. ROTH:

S. 2766. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to phase out the earnings test over a 5-year period for individuals who have attained retirement age, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

LIBERALIZATION OF EARNINGS TEST

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, America's seniors are an evermore important segment of our society. Today, Americans are living longer and remaining active well beyond what was once considered normal retirement age. In 1900, only 4 percent of the population was age 65 or older; in 1988, older citizens represent more than 12 percent of the total population. With longer life expectancies, our fellow citizens remain vital well past 65, and yet we have a tendency to cap their opportunity to participate and contribute once they reach retirement. While this tendency is wrong, I find it particularly disturbing that this Government has produced a policy which further condones the notion that seniors should virtually drop out once reaching the normal age of retirement. Mr. President, I am referring to the Social Security earnings limitation.

Under current law, if an individual continues to work for an employer after Social Security benefits start, that individual is subject to an earnings limitation until age 70. If a person earns more than the earnings limitation, which this year is $8,400 for those age 65 to 70, Social Security will reduce his or her benefits by $1 for every $2 earned over the limit. For a number of reasons, the earnings limitation is counterproductive and inequitable. Today I am introducing legislation that will provide for its gradual elimination.

Under my legislation, the earnings limit will be raised by $3,192 a year between 1990 and 1994, and then eliminated completely in 1995 for all those beneficiaries above normal retirement age, which presently is age 65. Furthermore, this measure would accelerate the effective date of the 8-percent delayed retirement credit as provided for in current law from 2009 to 1995.

This legislation is necessary because the earnings limitation is a work disincentive that makes little sense in this day and age. Whether it be to remain active or to simply make ends meet, more and more seniors want to continue working. But when faced with the consequences that the earnings limitation brings with it, many seniors choose full retirement rather than sacrificing 50 percent of the Social Security retirement benefits that they had earned over their working lifetime. In the end, it is society's loss—the earnings limitation forces the retirement of otherwise productive individuals whose experience and skills would be so valuable to this Nation's work force.

In addition to unfairly dictating the lives of our senior citizens, the earnings limitation is also incredibly shortsighted. Fundamental changes in the age distribution of our population today are likely to lead to shifts in the labor force as well. Declining birth rates since the baby boom and longer life expectancies have led to a drastic increase in the number of senior citizens relative to younger persons. If we do not offer incentives for seniors to continue working past age 65, I believe we will see a significant shrinking of the labor force. This, in turn, means fewer taxpayers and, therefore, less revenue with which to fund Government activities. Also, tighter labor markets might raise the cost of labor to employers, which would increase the cost of production. These increased costs more than likely would be passed on to the consumer.

The earnings limitation has become an anachronism. Today, we should look to our senior citizens for their guidance and wisdom, and one of the best ways to receive the benefits of their insight is on the job. Removal of the earnings limitation would give America's seniors the opportunity to remain active, contributing, productive members of society, and would promote a valuable interaction among generations. The elderly are a resource that I feel we should not encourage to sit idly by, yet this is the clear impact of the Social Security earnings test.

The concept of removing the earnings limitation has broad bipartisan support here in Congress, and for good reason. The earnings limitation creates a sizable number of overpayments and underpayments on which the Social Security Administration has to spend many millions of dollars annually to keep track of and correct.

Whether the senior citizen needs to continue working in order to pay medical bills, or in order to maintain a healthy sense of self-esteem, I do not think they should be inhibited in any way. America's seniors have contributed so much to this country in the past. I feel it is a mistake to discourage them from continuing to do so. I urge my colleagues to review this proposal and lend it their support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2766

S. 2767. A bill to authorize a study of the history and culture of Warm Springs, NM, in order to preserve its historic and cultural legacy for future generations; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

WARM SPRINGS STUDY ACT

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill to authorize a study of the cultural history of the Warm Springs area of New Mexico. This bill would recommend appropriate means to ensure public use and continued preservation of an area that has special importance to the State of New Mexico and the American public. Warm Springs is an area that saw the development of important prehistoric cultures and significant historic events in American frontier military history.

Located in the foothills of the San Mateo Mountains in extreme southern Socorro County, NM, is a huge but little known warm spring. Its name is Ojo Caliente—Spanish for Warm Spring—and it is the source of a 20-mile stretch of perennial stream named Canada Alamosa.

The area is steeped in southwestern history. The ruins of numerous Pueblo sites can be found, evidence of past use of the area by the Mibres Indian culture. Ojo Caliente and Canada Alamosa were occupied by the Warm Springs Apache who considered this area their traditional homeland until they were removed during the mid-1800's. The remains of Fort Harmony, another reminder of the American frontier era, are also to be found on the site of Ojo Caliente. Other evidence of the American homesteading—mining, ranching, outlaw period—remains. Many stories can be told about important historic and prehistoric events that occurred in the area. I will cite just one example for you.

The Warm Springs Apache Reservation was established by executive order in 1857. It included Ojo Caliente and Canada Alamosa, key parts of the tribe's traditional homeland. A short time later the Federal Government decided to consolidate the Warm Springs Apache Band with other Apaches on the San Carlos Reservation in Arizona.

The Warm Springs Apaches, however, simply could not adapt to the San Carlos Reservation. Passive resistance in the form of breakouts occurred, during which the Warm Springs Apaches would return to their homeland at Ojo Caliente. Following such a breakout, it was typical for the U.S. Army to grant permission for them to remain at Ojo Caliente. The Bureau of Indian Affairs, determined to consolidate its Indian charges, would later force them to return to San Carlos.

In 1879, when the order came from Washington to once again return the tribe to the reservation after a 2-year hiatus, the Warm Springs Apache Chief Victorio went to war. His force, consisting of no more than 75 men encumbered by women and children, was pitted against a quarter of the strength of the U.S. Army and elements of the Mexican Army. Looking back at this war, it could only be considered incredible: Victorio and his men consistently defeated both armies.

After a year and a half of battles, the War Department and Bureau of Indian Affairs decided that the Warm Springs Apache should not have been relocated to San Carlos. Plans were made to inform Victorio and his people that if he would vow to live in peace, they would be granted Ojo Caliente "forever." The message, however, was never received. In late 1880, the battle weary Victorio and most of his army were killed in an ambush by the Mexican Army at Tres Castillos.

We cannot afford to lose this unique cultural and historical heritage. My bill would authorize a study of the area to determine the importance of past events and make recommendations regarding how this heritage might best be preserved so as to be available to future generations.

It is for these reasons that I ask my colleagues to support this bill authorizing study of the cultural and historic importance of the Warm Springs area.●

By Mr. HEINZ:

S. 2768. A bill to increase and extend the authorization of appropriations for highway bridge replacement and rehabilitation, and for other purposes; referred to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

BRIDGE IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce critically needed legislation to improve and repair our Nation's troubled bridges.

Earlier this year, the National Journal wrote, "One out of four bridges is considered unsafe. Every two days, a bridge collapses. More than 4,125 bridges are closed because of dangerous conditions." To twist the title of a famous song by Simon and Garfunkel, Mr. President, we are confronted with troubled bridges over water.

In my own State of Pennsylvania, the Southwestern Pennsylvania Regional Planning Commission reported in April of this year that despite the State's approximately $2 billion investment in bridge repair and replacement since 1982, it is still far short of addressing all of southwestern Pennsylvania's critical bridge problems.

Recognizing this, our Commonwealth has slated an additional 804 bridge rehabilitation and replacement projects in the State at a cost of nearly $500 million.

Yet, Mr. President, in spite of these initiatives, two out of five bridges are still deficient. For example, the Smithfield bridge, which crosses the Monongahela River, linking downtown Pittsburgh and the city's south side, has been identified as needing rehabilitation work for over a decade.

This bridge, and thousands like it across our Nation, should not have to wait 10 years for repair, or wait so long that they become closed to traffic. They are literally catastrophes waiting to happen. To illustrate the magnitude of the bridge crisis faced in this instance, by my constituents, I ask unanimous consent that the text of an article in the Pittsburgh Post Gazette on the Southwestern Pennsylvania Regional Planning Commission's report be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRIDGE REPAIR WAR BEING LOST—SPRPC REPORT SAYS FUNDING IS INSUFFICIENT TO PRESERVE INFRASTRUCTURE

(By Virginia Linn)

The conditions of the region's bridges will be as bad in 10 years as it is now if funding for repairs continues at the current level, a bridge study shows.

Despite the millions of state and federal dollars allocated, repairs "fall far short of what is needed to resolve southwestern Pennsylvania's bridge problem," according to the fifth annual bridge report by the Southwestern Pennsylvania Regional Planning Commission.

The report reviews the 4,789 bridges in Allegheny, Armstrong, Beaver, Butler, Washington and Westmoreland counties.

The state has implemented two Billion Dollar Bridge programs that are providing state and federal funding for repairs.

The first $1.4 billion plan launched in 1982 committed $449 million to this region. So far, $320 million has been spent here. The second plan for $1.7 billion approved in 1986, committed $342 million to the region, with $12 million already spent. More than 900 bridges in the region are to be replaced or repaired under these programs.

"We have to really compliment the commonwealth and PennDOT with what they've done with a limited amount of dollars," said Charles DiPietro, transportation planning director for the SPRPC.

"But the report concludes that even with this aggressive program, the governor and PennDOT still have a major problem," he said.

Almost four out of 10 of the region's bridges, or 39 percent, are still deficient. This is up from 37 percent in 1986.

The Billion Dollar Bridge plans address only 42 percent of the 1,866 deficient bridges in the region.

The SPRPC estimates that the region has $1 billion worth of needed bridge repairs. Moreover, 114 additional bridges are projected to become deficient each year, the study shows.

The condition of each bridge is rated on a scale of 1 to 100, with the highest number being in the best shape. A bridge rated 80 or below is eligible for federally funded repairs.

In Allegheny County, 556 of 1,535 bridges were deficient in 1987, the report shows. This was up from 485 in 1986 and a 20 percent increase from 1983.

In Beaver County, 41 percent of 424 bridges were deficient, up 21 percent since 1986.

More than half of the 538 bridges in Butler County were deficient; in Westmoreland County, 38 percent of 903 bridges needed repair—up 23 percent since 1986.

Repairs in Armstrong and Washington counties have slightly reduced the number of deficient bridges.

Past reports by the commission also have shown little progress on bridge conditions.

"We almost feel like we're 'crying wolf.' We keep saying the same thing every year," DiPietro said. "But the hard facts are we're facing a real infrastructure crisis."

One problem is that many of the bridges are owned by municipalities and require local matching funds to get federal repair dollars.

Even if a 5 percent match of $250,000 might be required on a $5 million project, "how does a Clairton come up with $250,000 to move a project?" DiPietro asked.

The commission did not recommend any solutions on how to accelerate bridge repairs.

DiPietro said the commission is exploring the possibility of convention a conference to review the problem.

A creative financing plan must be developed, DiPietro said. Federal budget cutbacks and increased demand on state dollars make it no longer feasible to rely on traditional financing for these repairs.

The commission, which focuses on planning for the six-county Pittsburgh metropolitan region, was established in 1962 under provisions of a state law. Such metropolitan commissions now are mandated by federal law.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, our roads and bridges, waterways and railroads, streets and sidewalks are the economic lifelines that provide raw materials for manufacturers, carry goods to markets, allow workers to get to work and our children to school. Both America's economic future and our present necessities depend on a reliable and structurally sound infrastructure.

Mr. President, this is a problem that has long concerned me. In 1977, I introduced the Bridge Safety Act, which authorized an expansion of the Federal Bridge Program. This act was included in modified form into the 1978 Highway Act, which increased the Federal commitment to bridge repair and replacement from $200 to $300 million per year prior to 1978 to $1 billion per year from 1978 to 1982. Subsequent highway acts in 1982 and 1987 increased bridge funding to its present authorized level of $1.63 billion.

Mr. President, given the bridge crisis our Nation now faces, I think it is time that Congress again expand these efforts and do so in an innovative way.

For this reason, I am introducing the "Bridge Improvement Act of 1988." This legislation would increase authorizations for bridge replacement and rehabilitation by $2.5 billion over the next 5 years. This would raise the annual Federal commitment by $500 million, from the present $1.63 billion to $2.13 billion.

Mr. President, in many respects, this is a modest proposal when one considers that the Federal Government is already spending $570 million less in fiscal year 1988 than we authorized in fiscal year 1987. My legislation would bring total program spending up to slightly below the Highway Act levels. And, given the nearly $10 billion surplus in the Highway Trust Fund, we can certainly sustain this level of spending—for which motorists pay with the 9-cents-per-gallon Federal gas tax. Eight cents of that tax goes for highways and bridge repair. The tax is expected to generate $13.1 billion this year alone.

My legislation is also designed to help those States who help themselves. It requires the Department of Transportation to conduct a study of the efforts made by each State to fund bridge replacement and rehabilitation in the State. DOT would study the percentage of non-Federal money a State spends on bridge repairs, as well as the rate at which each State is reducing its number of deficient bridges. The latter would be measured as the number of bridges improved, less the number of bridges deteriorating on an annual basis.

Based on this study, the Department would be required to make recommendations for a new allocation formula which could be used to allocate the additional funds that are authorized to be appropriated under this legislation. Until and unless Congress develops an allocation formula based on DOT's recommendations, the additional funding would be spent under the existing formula.

Mr. President, this legislation will provide the resources needed to protect public safety and promote commerce. We cannot continue to identify deteriorating bridges and do nothing for lack of resources. The resources are there. My legislation will help ensure that we will actually be able to cross the bridge when we come to it. I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

By Mr. CHAFEE (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S. 2769. A bill to amend title V of the Public Health Service Act to provide for the development of comprehensive community prevention initiatives; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

COMPREHENSIVE YOUTH ACTIVITIES ACT

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Comprehensive Community Substance Abuse Prevention Act, a bill to provide our young people with real and positive alternatives to the use and abuse of drugs and alcohol. I am joined in this effort by Senator STAFFORD and Senator DURENBERGER.

Prevention is the key to the drug and alcohol problem in this Nation and it is the underpinning of this legislation. More and more of our children are becoming substance abusers every day. The ages at which they begin to experiment with drugs and alcohol is much younger than we might ever have imagined. The percentage of students using drugs by the sixth grade is three times what it was in 1975. One out of every six 13-year-olds use marijuana and one out of every six high school seniors use cocaine.

Once a young person experiments for the first time he or she often ends up spiraling deeper and deeper into a morass of problems as if caught in a tornado. In one study, students taking marijuana were twice as likely to average D's and F's as nonusing students. The Department of Education estimates that high school seniors who are heavy drug users are more than three times as likely to drop out of school than nondrug users.

We must prevent our children from falling into this hole. We have to get to them early and provide them with alternatives to drug abuse that will motivate and excite them to excel in their endeavors. This legislation takes a giant step in precisely that direction.

My bill creates a block grant program within the Department of Health and Human Services to provide States and communities with the resources to develop recreational and educational alternatives to substance use which are attractive to children and youth.

The bill seeks to encourage the establishment of programs aimed at high risk children, such as those who are likely to drop out of school or who have already dropped out. The programs will focus on involving youth in community-based after school or weekend activities such as sports, theater or volunteer work. They may also develop training or employment opportunities. These programs will provide children with the opportunity to live a drug-free life from the start by giving them the tools and support they need to be successful.

The Community Youth Prevention Act would be authorized at $50 million in 1989, $55 million in 1990, $60 million in 1991, $66.55 million in 1992, and $73.2 million in 1993. Each State shall receive at least $250,000 each year for the program. The remaining funds shall be used by the Secretary for programs which target high-risk areas and populations which are at high-risk for drug and alcohol abuse.

A small business working together with the local school district and a job training program could apply for a grant through the Governor's office to provide an internship and training program for dropouts, those at risk of dropping out and those with low grades. The goal would be to help those young people learn job skills, explore areas of possible interest, and help them understand how their work in school can help prepare them for a job.

A YMCA might apply for a grant to begin an athletic program aimed at young people in a high school who might enjoy athletics but are not good enough to play on the school athletic teams. The program might also include some field trips.

A local theater group might apply for a grant to get young people involved in the performing arts through acting classes and production internships. Libraries might do something similar with reading or creative writing programs.

A local social services agency might work together with local musicians and artists to provide lessons to young people.

A local environmental protection group might develop a program to get kids interested in outdoor activities and preservation of the environment. Activities might include camping or sailing trips, hikes, and conservation projects.

It is time for us to send a message to the children and youth of our Nation that we care as parents, teachers, friends, and neighbors. It is time for us to help them develop self-esteem and find their individual strengths.

I believe that every young person has something to offer: a talent, a skill. Our responsibility is to help them identify that talent and develop it. Every step forward builds a child's self-esteem. Every word of encouragement builds hope and excitement for the future. Every success builds optimism.

My legislation will encourage the involvement of the entire community in helping to encourage and nurture our children.

Only through a good self-image and a sense of purpose can our young people find the power to avoid substance addiction. We can help them by showing them that exciting alternatives exist and by opening those alternatives to them.

Mr. President, I ask that my bill be printed in the RECORD at this point as if read.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. NICKLES (by request):

S. 2770. A bill entitled the "Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988"; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

OIL PIPELINE REGULATORY REFORM ACT

● Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce by request the administration's legislative proposal entitled the "Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988." For a number of years, the administration has been working with the oil pipeline industry to fashion an appropriate reform bill. This legislation transmitted today by the Department of Energy is a significant step in the development of a consensus regulatory reform bill.

Shortly after entering the Senate in 1981, I introduced legislation to decontrol oil pipelines. Hearings were held on that bill, revealing significant problems associated with FERC regulation of oil pipeline rates. Since these hearings, economic studies, including one by the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice, have shown that most oil pipelines can be deregulated without impact on consumers. Although a consensus has developed on the need for a more free market, common carriage approach to oil and petroleum product pipeline regulation to maintain effective service and reduce costs, there has not been a consensus on the appropriate methodology to achieve that goal.

The administration's new proposed legislation will serve as a useful starting point for serious and long overdue congressional consideration of oil pipeline regulatory reform. Of particular interest is that the bill provides both a means to eliminate unnecessary regulation in markets where adequate competition exists to protect consumers and also proposes reforms of the regulatory methodology for those pipelines serving particular markets which require continued regulation to best serve the public interest. It is my hope that all interested parties, including producers, consumers and States, will carefully review this administration proposal and develop their comments and recommendations for presentation to the administration and to Congress next year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the transmittal letter from Secretary of Energy John Herrington, a short summary of the proposed legislation, and the text of the proposed legislation be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988."

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) THE CONGRESS FINDS AND DECLARES THAT—

(1) oil pipelines are of critical strategic and economic importance to the Nation;

(2) the Nation's interests are best served by encouraging the competitive and efficient operation of oil pipelines;

(3) economic regulation can impose unproductive costs, discourage and distort investment decisions, cause regulatory uncertainty, and often is only partially effective in achieving its goals;

(4) most markets served by oil pipelines are sufficiently competitive that, given application of the antitrust laws, economic regulation of such pipelines in such markets is unnecessary to ensure reasonable rates and adequate service;

(5) for those oil pipeline markets for which competition and antitrust enforcement are not sufficient to ensure their efficient operation, continued economic regulation may be necessary to prevent abuse of significant market power;

(6) where continued economic regulation of oil pipelines remains necessary, such regulation must be reformed to maximize reliance on competition to benefit consumers, reduce regulatory costs, and encourage the efficient use and development of existing and new pipelines;

(7) for those oil pipeline markets for which continued economic regulation is necessary, consumers can be best protected, costs of regulation can be best reduced, and efficiency can be best enhanced by regulating the maximum rates that pipelines may charge and adjusting the maximum rates to reflect price changes in competitive markets, while allowing pipelines freely to discount below such maximum rates; and

(8) such reformed rate regulation in markets in which there is significant market power will provide just compensation to a pipeline if the allowable rate is comparable to what that rate would be if the market were competitive and not subject to market power, as calculated by a method that establishes maximum rates, permits them to be revised if they had been enhanced by market power, and adjusts them over time by an index reflecting pipeline prices in competitive markets.

(b) IT THEREFORE IS THE POLICY OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—

(1) to remove the burden of economic regulation from those oil pipeline markets that operate under competitive circumstances or for which such regulation would not be an effective or efficient remedy to constrain the exercise of market power; and

(2) to provide for continued economic regulation of only those oil pipeline markets for which such regulation will increase economic efficiency and for which the benefits of such regulation outweigh its costs.

REGULATORY REFORM AND DEREGULATION

SEC. 3. The Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7101-7352) is amended by adding the following new sections 408, 409, 410, and 411:

"SEC. 408. REGULATION OF PIPELINES.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section and sections 409 and 410—

"(1) the term 'pipeline' means any pipeline subject to existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction or which would be subject to existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction except for this section; Provided, That such term does not include the Trans-Alaska Pipeline authorized by the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act (43 U.S.C. 1651 et seq.); or any pipeline directly or indirectly delivering oil to the Trans-Alaska Pipeline;

"(2) the term 'existing pipeline' means a pipeline brought into service on or before March 30, 1988, or that is under construction as of March 30, 1988;

"(3) the term 'new pipeline' means a pipeline brought into service after March 30, 1988, and that is not under construction as of March 30, 1988;

"(4) the term 'Attorney General' means the Attorney General of the United States or the Attorney General's designee;

"(5) the term 'existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction' means those functions and authorities transferred by sections 306 and 402(b) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7155, 7172(b));

"(6) the term 'Commission rate regulation' means those functions and authorities set forth in section 410;

"(7) the term 'adjudication' means an agency hearing, which may, in the discretion of the Secretary, be a hearing on the record as governed by section 554 of title 5, United States Code;

"(8) the term 'rate' means the price for transportation by pipeline, including all charges that the pipeline requires its customers to pay for the transportation and for any ancillary services set forth as part of that pipeline's tariff on file with the Commission on March 30, 1988, or approved by the Commission on March 30, 1988, or approved by the Commission thereafter; and

"(9) the term 'interested person' means a person whose economic or business interests would be substantially affected by a finding that Commission rate regulation is in the public interest or that a base rate should be revised.

"(b) TERMINATION OF EXISTING COMMISSION REGULATORY JURISDICTION AND INITIAL CONSIDERATION OF PIPELINE REGULATORY STATUS—

"(1) TERMINATION OF EXISTING COMMISSION REGULATORY JURISDICTION.—Existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction over pipelines shall terminate sixty days after the effective date of the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988. On that date, pipelines shall become subject to sections 408, 409, 410, and 411 of this Act.

"(2) PETITION BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OR INTERESTED PERSONS—

"(A) Within 120 days after the effective date of the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988, the Attorney General may petition the Secretary for an adjudication of whether Commission rate regulation of an existing pipeline in any market is in the public interest. Upon receipt of such a petition, the Secretary shall conduct an adjudication in accordance with subsection (b)(3). In bringing any such petition, the Attorney General shall be guided by the methods, assumptions, standards, and definitions underlying and set forth in the Report of the United States Department of Justice dated May 1986; Provided, however, That none of the findings and conclusions of the Report, and none of the methods, assumptions, standards, and definitions underlying and set forth in the Report shall be binding on the Secretary in any adjudications conducted under this section.

"(B) Within 180 days after the effective date of the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988, any interested person may petition the Secretary for an adjudication of whether Commission rate regulation of an existing pipeline in any market is in the public interest. Any person filing such a petition shall provide a reasonable basis for the conclusion that Commission rate regulation is in the public interest, and shall serve a copy on the Attorney General and on the pipeline for which Commission rate regulation is sought. Upon receipt of such a petition, the Secretary, for good cause shown, may conduct an adjudication in accordance with subsection (b)(3). The Secretary may consult with the Attorney General in deciding whether to conduct an adjudication, and shall conduct an adjudication in accordance with subsection (b)(3) if the Attorney General so recommends.

"(C) Not later than 270 days after the effective date of the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988, the Secretary shall publish a list of all adjudications that the Secretary has determined will be held pursuant to this subsection, identifying in each case the pipeline and the market for which Commission rate regulation is sought. Pipeline rates for service to markets which are not identified in the list published by the Secretary shall no longer be subject to Commission regulatory jurisdiction except as provided in Section 409 of this Act.

"(3) ADJUDICATION BY THE SECRETARY—

"(A) The Secretary shall find that Commission rate regulation of an existing pipeline in a market is in the public interest only if it is demonstrated that regulation is necessary to constrain the exercise of substantial market power in the supply or demand of products transported by the pipeline in that market. If the Secretary finds that Commission rate regulation of an existing pipeline in a market is in the public interest, Commission rate regulation shall continue. If the Secretary finds that Commission rate regulation of an existing pipeline in a market is not in the public interest, regulation shall terminate at a time the Secretary designates, but in no event shall that regulation continue beyond sixty days after the Secretary issues the finding.

"(B) A finding under subsection (b)(3)(A) shall be issued within one year after the Secretary decides to conduct the adjudication, unless the Secretary, in the event of unusual circumstances, determines that the finding cannot be issued within one year. In such a case, the Secretary shall make specific findings as to the unusual circumstances necessitating the delay, and shall specify a date certain by which the Secretary will issue the finding, but in no event shall the Secretary's finding be issued more than two years after the Secretary decides to conduct the adjudication.

"(C) If parties to an adjudication conducted by the Secretary reach a settlement of the issues prior to the Secretary's finding that Commission rate regulation of a pipeline in a market is in the public interest, it shall bind those parties. If all parties reach such a settlement, the Secretary shall terminate the proceeding by accepting the settlement.

"(c) Reconsideration of Pipeline Regulatory Status for Pipeline Subject to Commission Rate Regulation—

"(1) Upon petition of any interested person, the Secretary may conduct an adjudication of whether Commission rate regulation of an existing pipeline in any market subject to that regulation is in the public interest in accordance with subsection (b)(3). The Secretary shall notify the Attorney General of any petition for adjudication or decision to conduct an adjudication under this paragraph and may consult with the Attorney General in deciding whether to conduct an adjudication.

"(2) If the Secretary finds that Commission rate regulation of an existing pipeline in a market subject to that regulation is not in the public interest, Commission rate regulation over that pipeline in that market shall terminate when the Secretary designates, but in no event shall Commission rate regulation continue beyond sixty days after the Secretary issues the finding.

"(d) Participation by the Attorney General.—The Attorney General may participate in any adjudication initiated by petition from any interested person under this section, and shall participate upon the request of the Secretary; Provided, however, That in so doing the Attorney General shall be guided by the methods, assumptions, standards, and definitions set forth in the Report of the United States Department of Justice dated May 1986.

"(e) New Pipelines.—New pipelines shall not be subject to existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction or to Commission rate regulation, but shall be subject to section 409.

"(f) Extent of Commission Jurisdiction—

"(1) The termination pursuant to this section of existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction or Commission rate regulation does not apply to products transported before the termination.

"(2) Commission rate regulation of a pipeline in a market made subject to that regulation under this section shall be prospective only. Products transported by the pipeline before regulation becomes effective under this section shall not be subject to such regulation.

"(3) Existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction terminated under this section, including existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction over new pipelines, shall not revert back to, be delegated to, or otherwise transfer to, the Department of Energy, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any other agency of the Federal Government.

"(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, and except as otherwise provided in sections 409 and 410, no state or political subdivision thereof, and no agency of the Federal Government may regulate any pipeline with respect to which existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction or Commission rate regulation has been terminated pursuant to this section, including existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction and Commission rate regulation over new pipelines, to the extent that such regulation is similar in nature to those functions and authorities constituting existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction or Commission rate regulation that are terminated under this section. Provided, however, That nothing in this Act shall be deemed to limit any authority vested in any state or political subdivision thereof to regulate pipelines engaged in intrastate commerce. Such provisions include, but are not limited to, subsections 5(e) and 5(f) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1334 (e) and (f)) and section 28(r) of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 185(r)).

"(g) Rules and Regulations.—Notwithstanding section 501 of this Act (42 U.S.C. 7191), the Secretary and the Attorney General each may promulgate in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, rules and regulations necessary or appropriate to carry out their respective responsibilities under this section. Rules and regulations proposed by the Secretary implementing this section or any other actions taken by the Secretary under this section shall not be subject to section 404 of this Act (42 U.S.C. 7174).

"(h) Judicial Review.—

"(1) Notwithstanding section 502 of this Act (42 U.S.C. 7192), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over any petition for judicial review under this section.

"(2) Any action of the Attorney General under this section, including without limitation any decision to petition or not to petition for any adjudication under this section, is an agency action committed to agency discretion by law, and shall not be subject to judicial review in any manner.

"SEC. 409. COMMON CARRIER STATUS; CONTRACTS.

"(a) Common Carriage.—In the public interest and the interest of the national defense, notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, pipelines subject to this section shall be required to operate as common carriers, as follows:

"(1) to provide transportation service to all persons upon reasonable demand and upon fair, equitable and nondiscriminatory terms and conditions and to establish through routes with other common carrier pipelines, Provided however, That nothing in this paragraph shall pertain to rates;

"(2) to establish and observe just and reasonable classifications of property for transportation and just and reasonable regulations and practices affecting that transportation, Provided however, That nothing in this paragraph shall pertain to rates;

"(3) to refrain from disclosing to any person, other than the shipper or consignee, without consent of the shipper or consignee, any information concerning the nature, kind, quantity, destination, consignee or routing of any property tendered or delivered.

"(b) Publication of Terms and Conditions.—Pipelines shall publish and file with the Commission schedules setting forth applicable terms and conditions of carriage, but excluding the rates to be charged for such carriage.

"(c) Contracts.—Contracts between pipelines and other persons on terms and conditions other than those applicable to basic common carriage as filed pursuant to subsection (b) shall conclusively be presumed to be in the public interest as long as, in regulated markets, the regulated service is available at no more than the maximum rate.

"(d) Enforcement.—The Commission shall enforce compliance with the obligations set forth in this section, and may adopt rules and regulations necessary or appropriate for that purpose.

"SEC. 410. COMMISSION RATE REGULATION.

"(a) Market-By-Market Regulation.—Except as initially established pursuant to section 408(b)(1), rates of pipelines subject to this section shall be regulated only in markets in which the Secretary has found Commission rate regulation to be in the public interest pursuant to section 408.

"(b) Rate Caps.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the rates of any pipeline in any market subject to this section shall be regulated as follows:

"(1) Base rates.—The base rate of a pipeline in a market made subject to Commission rate regulation pursuant to section 408(b)(1) upon the termination of existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction shall be—

"(A) Those rates that were in effect and not subject to investigation by the Commission on March 30, 1988, increased or reduced by the percentage change in the Producer Price Index for total finished goods calculated by the Bureau of Labor Statistics (PPI) from that date to the date that Commission rate regulation commences pursuant to section 408(b)(1);

"(B) With respect to rates that were subject to investigation by the Commission on March 30, 1988, which investigation was not terminated as of the termination of existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction pursuant to section 408(b)(1), those rates that were in effect upon the last rate change prior to March 30, 1988, that was not made subject to an investigation by the Commission, or was settled or was finally adjudicated by the Commission, increased or reduced by the percentage change in the PPI from the effective date of that change to the date that Commission rate regulation commences pursuant to section 408(b)(1);

"(C) With respect to rate that were subject to investigation by the Commission on March 30, 1988, which investigation was terminated by a final adjudication or a settlement aprpoved by the Commission, prior to the termination of existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction pursuant to section 408(b)(1), those finally adjudicated or settled rates increased or reduced by the percentage change in the PPI from the effective date of the final adjudication or settlement to the date that Commission rate regulation commences pursuant to section 408(b)(1);

"(D) With respect to pipelines not in service on March 30, 1988, those rates initially established by those pipelines.

"(2) One-time revision of base rates—

"(A) Proceeding subsequent to public interest finding.—Upon any finding by the Secretary pursuant to section 408(b) that Commission rate regulation of any pipeline in any market is in the public interest ("public interest finding"), the Secretary may consider in a subsequent proceeding, in accordance with the procedures in this paragraph, whether any base rate then applicable for that pipeline in that market should be reduced.

"(B) Petition by the Attorney General or interested persons—

"(i) Within 120 days after a public interest finding, the Attorney General may petition the Secretary for an adjudication of whether any base rate of that pipeline in that market should be reduced. Upon receipt of such a petition, the Secretary shall conduct an adjudication in accordance with subsection (b)(2)(C).

"(ii) Within 180 days after a public interest finding, any interested person may petition the Secretary for an adjudication of whether any base rate of that pipeline in that market should be reduced. Such a petition shall provide a reasonable basis for the conclusion that the base rate should be reduced, and shall be served on the pipeline and on the Attorney General. Upon receipt of such a petition, the Secretary, for good cause shown, may conduct an adjudication in accordance with subsection (b)(2)(C). The Secretary may consult with the Attorney General in deciding whether to conduct an adjudication, and shall conduct an adjudication if the Attorney General so recommends.

"(iii) Not later than 270 days after any public interest finding, the Secretary shall publish a list of all adjudications that the Secretary has determined will be held pursuant to this paragraph, identifying in each case the pipeline, the market, and the base rate for which a reduction is sought.

"(C) ADJUDICATION BY THE SECRETARY—

"(i) The Secretary shall order a reduction if the petitioner demonstrates that the pipeline's market power has resulted in a base rate that is significantly higher than the rate likely would be if the relevant market were not subject to market power. In making this determination, the Secretary shall consider only statistical evidence of rates charged by that pipeline in competitive markets, with appropriate recognition of the effects of factors such as the distance of a movement. For purposes of this paragraph, a base rate shall be deemed significantly higher than the rate likely would be if the relevant market were not subject to market power only if the difference is statistically significant under commonly accepted standards.

"(ii) Any finding under clause (i) shall be issued within one year after the Secretary decides to conduct an adjudication, unless the Secretary, in the event of unusual circumstances, determines that the finding cannot be issued within one year. In such a case, the Secretary shall make specific findings as to the unusual circumstances necessitating the delay, and shall specify a date certain by which the Secretary will issue the finding, but in no event shall the Secretary's finding be issued more than two years after the Secretary decides to conduct the adjudication.

"(iii) If parties to an adjudication conducted by the Secretary reach a settlement of the issues prior to the Secretary's finding, it shall bind those parties. If all parties reach such a settlement, the Secretary shall terminate the proceeding by accepting the settlement.

"(D) EFFECTIVE DATE OF ADJUSTMENT.—Any adjustment of a base rate ordered under this subsection shall be effective as of the date of the Secretary's finding pursuant to subsection (b)(2)(C)(ii), or one year after the Secretary decides to conduct the adjudication, whichever comes first.

"(E) PARTICIPATION BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General may participate in any adjudication initiated by petition from any interested person under this section, and shall participate upon the request of the Secretary.

"(3) MAXIMUM RATES; RATE ADJUSTMENTS; TRANSITION PERIODS; COMPETITIVE PIPELINE PRICE INDEX.—

"(A) The Commission shall calculate, for each rate subject to Commission rate regulation, a maximum rate. Maximum rates shall be adjusted periodically as set forth in this subsection, at intervals of not more than six months except as otherwise provided below.

"(B) Following commencement of Commission rate regulation pursuant to subsection 408(b)(1)—

"(i) For the first period, which shall be from the commencement of Commission rate regulation pursuant to subsection 408(b)(1) until the date of publication by the Secretary of the list of adjudications required by subsection 408(b)(2)(C), the maximum rate shall be the base rate.

"(ii) For each of the next two periods, which each shall be six months, the maximum rate for pipelines serving markets which are subject to adjudications shall be the base rate increased or reduced by the percentage change in the PPI from the date upon which the rate utilized as the base rate became effective.

"(iii) For all subsequent periods, the maximum rate shall be the prior maximum rate increase or reduced by the percentage change in the Competitive Pipeline Price Index ("CPPI") during the previous period. Provided, however, That, with respect to a settlement approved by the Commission after March 30, 1988, which expressly governs maximum rates for any future period, the settlement rate shall be the maximum rate until the conclusion of that period, at which time the rate in effect shall be the maximum rate to be increased or reduced by the percentage change in the CPPI pursuant to this section.

"(C)(i) The Secretary shall calculate a Competitive Pipeline Price Index ("CPPI") to reflect relative changes in prices charged by pipelines in competitive markets not subject to Commission rate regulation. The CPPI shall be derived from the average revenue per barrel-mile of a sample of pipelines in such markets. The Secretary shall select the sample of pipelines, markets, and revenues to be used in calculating the CPPI, and in the Secretary's discretion, may exclude data from pipelines not subject to Commission rate regulation but whose rates for any reason may not reflect effective competition. The Secretary may require reports from pipelines for the purpose of calculating the CPPI.

"(ii) The Secretary shall initially publish the CPPI one year after the termination of existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction, and shall publish changes in the CPPI at intervals of not more than six months.

"(iii) The Secretary may substitute an appropriate existing index for the CPPI if such substitute index accurately reflects increases in prices in competitive pipeline markets and if the Secretary determines that calculation of the CPPI would be unduly burdensome.

"(4) LAWFULNESS OF RATES.—

"(A) MAXIMUM RATES.—Any rate subject to Commission rate regulation under this section which does not exceed the maximum rate determined in accordance with subsection (b)(3) shall be presumed conclusively to be lawful and shall not be subject to protest, complaint, suspension, investigation or any other challenge or inquiry under Commission rate regulation.

"(B) RATES BELOW MAXIMUM RATES.—Nothing in this Act shall make it unlawful for a pipeline to charge a rate that is lower than the maximum rate determined in accordance with subsection (b)(3); Provided, however, That a pipeline charging such lower rates to any shipper with which it is affiliated, by means of common ownership or otherwise, shall be required to make such lower rates available to any shipper upon the same terms and conditions of service.

"(5) PUBLICATION AND MAXIMUM RATES.—The Commission shall publish base rates, rate adjustments, and maximum rates determined in accordance with this section and make them available for public inspection.

"(c) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS IN REGULATED MARKETS.—A pipeline subject to Commission rate regulation in a market shall not condition pipeline services in that market on entering into any other transaction, or on taking or refraining from any action.

"(d) EXPANDED CAPACITY—

"(1) In any market subject to Commission rate regulation, if a pipeline expands its available capacity, it may petition the Commission for a determination of the preexisting capacity that will remain subject to Commission rate regulation. If such a determination is made, the additional capacity shall not be subject to Commission rate regulation. Interested persons may participate in the proceeding.

"(2) The Commission may promulgate any regulations necessary or appropriate to ensure that rights to use preexisting capacity at rates governed by Commission rate regulation are allocated to shippers in a manner that both preserves the efficacy of Commission rate regulation of preexisting capacity and is consistent with the requirements of section 409 of this Act.

"(e) ENFORCEMENT.—The Commission shall enforce compliance with the obligations set forth in this section, and may adopt rules and regulations necessary or appropriate for that purpose.

"(f) RULES AND REGULATIONS.—Notwithstanding section 501 of this Act (42 U.S.C. 7191), the Secretary and the Attorney General each may promulgate in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, rules and regulations necessary or appropriate to carry out their respective responsibilities under this section. Rules and regulations proposed by the Secretary implementing this section or any other actions taken by the Secretary under this section shall not be subject to section 404 of this Act (42 U.S.C. 7174).

"(g) JUDICIAL REVIEW—

"(1) Notwithstanding section 502 of this Act (42 U.S.C. 7192), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit shall have exlusive original jurisdiction over any petition for judicial review under this section.

"(2) Any action of the Attorney General under this section, including without limitation any decision to petition or not to petition for any adjudication under this section, is an agency action committed to agency discretion by law, and shall not be subject to judicial review in any manner.

"SEC. 411. REPORT TO CONGRESS.

"At the conclusion of the fifth year after the completion of all adjudications conducted under section 410 of this Act, the Secretary shall provide to the appropriate committees to Congress a report setting forth the findings and conclusions of the Secretary on the results of the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988 and its impact on the public interest. In such report, the Secretary shall make any recommendations that the Secretary deems to be appropriate."

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Sec. 4. (a) Section 402(b) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7172(b)), is amended by striking out "There" and inserting in its place "Subject to sections 408, 409, 410, and 411 of this Act, there."

Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988

PURPOSE OF THE LEGISLATION

The Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988 (OPPRA or the Act) is intended to eliminate unnecessary economic regulation of oil pipelines that operate in fully competitive markets. It also would reform in a procompetitive manner any regulation that remains necessary in the public interest. OPPRA would accomplish these goals by ending current Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) regulatory jurisdiction over all oil pipelines (other than the Trans-Alaska Pipeline System and the pipeline that lead into that system), and substituting new, simplified common carrier obligations and simplified rate regulation where necessary.

BACKGROUND

Oil pipelines have been regulated under the Interstate Commerce Act since 1906, first by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC) and, since 1977, by FERC. The original purpose of economic regulation was to simulate a workably competitive environment in an industry that was thought to have natural monopoly characteristics. Consequently, the Interstate Commerce Act instituted both rate and service regulation on oil pipelines to make sure that oil pipelines did not earn more than a competitive rate of return and to ensure nondiscriminatory access to them. Economic regulation at the ICC worked reasonably well for many years; FERC, however, primarily under court direction, altered the method of economic regulation of oil pipelines in the direction of a strict cost-of-service regime.

Cost-of-service regulation is ill suited to an industry that operates primarily in a competitive environment. Inefficiencies and distortions have developed because of cost-of-service regulation. Investment decisions have been distored so that the industry operates less efficiently and offers less service. The ultimate losers of the present regulatory system are consumers because the distribution system does not deliver products in the most efficient way.

In 1986, the Department of Justice completed a study that concluded that most oil pipelines operate in competitive markets so that continued economic regulation is not necessary. The study examined the markets in which oil pipelines operate to identify "high risk" markets where regulation would be needed to protect consumers from monopolistic pricing. The study concluded that, with the exception of some markets in five to eleven product pipelines, the industry was competitive and should be deregulated. Whle the Justice study examined the effects of oil pipeline market power in various markets, it assumed that the present form of cost-of-service regulation would not change. Thus, the report recommended continued regulation of an entire contiguous pipeline if it operated in any of the markets identified as "high risk."

The President proposed the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1987 to implement the recommendations of the 1986 Department of Justice study. That proposed legislation would have deregulated all pipelines within 120 days of its effective date, unless, after an administrative hearing, continued regulation of a particular pipeline was found to be in the public interest.

Since that bill was proposed, the Administration has reexamined the assumption that cost-of-service should continue for those oil pipelines that remain regulated in the public interest. The reexamination led to the conclusion that the present regulatory system was leading to serious distortions in the oil pipeline industry, because under that system oil pipelines are reluctant to make the necessary investments to maintain efficient operations and to expand to meet new supply and demand requirements.

Better results are anticipated by a shift of economic regulation from a pipeline-by-pipeline basis to a market-by-market basis using price cap regulation in the "high risk" markets. Price cap regulation would permit market-by-market regulation, inasmuch as a rate can be established in each market without the cost allocation problems inherent in cost-of-service regulation applied to the entire pipeline. With this shift to a different mode of regulation, more deregulation can occur because only "high risk" markets need be regulated and not the entire pipeline.

THE PRESENT PROPOSAL

The enclosed draft bill is intended to correct the distortions, inefficiencies, and misallocations of the present regulatory system. It would permit market forces to operate to the maximum extent possible while at the same time protecting shippers and consumers from any residual substantial market power that may exist in some markets in the industry. The draft bill would establish a procedure administered by the Department of Energy with the full participation of the Department of Justice to distinguish between pipeline markets that are competitive and those where substantial market power exists. The procedure to be used would assure that all interested persons are given the opportunity to participate in the decisionmaking process, thereby ensuring a fair and open process. Under this procedure, if the Secretary of Energy determines that rate regulation of an existing pipeline in a market is in the public interest, FERC rate regulation would be continued. Future rate regulation, however, would be on a price cap basis for that market, rather than the current cost-of-service basis. The draft bill establishes a procedure, also open to interested persons, to determine this maximum rate. In this way all pipelines that operate in competiive markets will be free to charge a competitive rate, while oil pipelines that operate in those few "high risk" markets where substantial market power exists will be regulated under a price cap method of regulation that stimulates the competitive environment.

The purpose of the shift to a different form of economic regulation is to eliminate much of the needless and burdensome regulation to which pipelines are now exposed. This regulatory reform is much less burdensome because it would require very little regulatory oversight and could be implemented and maintained in a relatively easy and inexpensive fashion. This regulatory reform would ease the burden on the oil pipeline industry, saving millions of dollars in regulatory compliance, while at the same time relieving FERC from major aspects of its present regulatory costs, saving millions of dollars in government expenditures. New oil pipelines would be free from rate regulation altogether.

In addition to this shift in economic regulation, the draft bill maintains some of the procompetitive aspects and shipper protections of present economic regulation. Oil pipelines would continue to be common carriers that cannot discriminate on the terms and conditions of service (except rates) among those who use them. This element of regulation has three significant benefits. First, it is virtually cost-free, imposing very limited financial burdens on the industry and the government. Second, it ensures that all users of the pipelines are treated fairly and in a nondiscriminatory manner. Third, in the states that grant eminent domain to entities that have common carrier obligations, these obligations also ensure that existing pipelines can expand and that new pipelines can be built by enabling pipelines to avail themselves of the state eminent domain laws.

There are other benfits of this proposed change in regulation besides the monetary savings from regulatory compliance. The elimination of rate regulation for pipelines operating in competitive markets means that regulatory distortions will be eliminated, permitting them to operate and invest in a manner that will lower costs and increase economic efficiency. For pipelines whose markets continue to be regulated, the method of regulation will be certain, thereby permitting pipelines to make investment decisions that will increase their operating efficiency and better serve their customers. In the final analysis, a more efficient oil pipeline system means that consumers will realize benefits from a distribution system that gets the product to the right place, at the right time, and in the most efficient way.

Section-by-Section Analysis

SHORT TITLE

The bill's prefatory clause provides that it may be cited as the "Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

Section 2 of the Act contains findings and purposes. These findings and purposes will serve to guide the Secretary of Energy, the Attorney General, the FERC, and the courts in their implementation of the Act.

REGULATORY REFORM AND DEREGULATION

Section 3 of the Act adds new sections 408, 409, 410, and 411 to the Department of Energy Organization Act, Pub. L. 95-91, 42 U.S.C. 7101, et seq., entitled "Regulation of Pipelines", "Common Carrier Status: Contracts", "Commission Rate Regulation", and "Report to Congress". It is anticipated that these sections will be codified as new sections 7178, 7179, 7180, and 7181 of title 42 United States Code.

SECTION 408—REGULATION OF PIPELINES

Section 408 sunsets existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction and replaces it with new streamlined common carrier obligations contained in new section 409 and—where appropriate—with new competition-based price cap regulation contained in new section 410.

Section 408(a) defines several terms that are used in sections 408, 409, and 410.

Section 408(b) reforms basic pipeline regulation and provides for the initial consideration of the regulatory status of all existing pipelines (except for TAPS and TAPS feeder lines).

Section 408(b)(1) sunsets existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction sixty days after the Act's effective date. It also provides that on the day of sunset, the new, streamlined common carrier obligations contained in new section 409 become effective with respect to all pipelines. During the pendency of adjudications, the rates of pipelines subject to those adjudications will be regulated on an interim basis under the provisions of section 410.

Section 408(b)(2) gives the Attorney General and any interested person the opportunity to petition the Secretary for an adjudication that new price cap regulation, termed "Commission rate regulation" and set forth in section 410, of the rates of a particular pipeline in a particular market would be in the public interest. Such petitions must be filed within 120 days of the Act's effective date for the Attorney General and within 180 days for interested persons.

In determining within 120 days of the Act's effective date which pipelines and which markets should be the subject of his petition for an adjudication, the Attorney General will be guided by the methods, assumptions, standards, and definitions set forth in the economic study of the oil pipeline industry dated May 1986. Interested persons will have the opportunity directly to petition the Secretary for an adjudication regarding a particular pipeline in a particular market, as well. Interested persons will not be bound by the methods, assumptions, standards, and definitions set forth in the Department of Justice study in petitioning for adjudications, nor will the Secretary be bound by the study in the conduct of any adjudications.

In preparing petitions, the Attorney General will have to define relevant markets. The term "market" is not defined in the Act because the definition inherently must be based on the facts of each particular case. The Attorney General will use recognized antitrust standards for defining markets (e.g., as set forth in the Department of Justice Merger Guidelines). Depending on the relevant facts (such as availability and price for alternative sources of products), a relevant market could be as large as an entire economic region covering parts of several states or as small as a single jet-fuel terminal at an airport. As noted above, the basic structural methodology of the Department's 1986 Report on Oil Pipeline Deregulation will guide the Attorney General's recommendations under the Act.

Not later than 270 days after the effective date of the Act, the Secretary is to publish a list of all adjudications that he has decided to conduct. For each market for which an adjudication is to be conducted, price cap regulation of the subject pipeline in the subject market will continue in effect while the Secretary conducts the adjudicatory proceeding. If no petition is filed with respect to a particular pipeline in a particular market, of if the Secretary does not find sufficient cause to conduct a petitioned-for adjudication, that pipeline's pricing in that market is deregulated upon publication of the list.

Section 408(b)(3) contains additional provisions regarding the adjudication of a pipeline's regulatory status. Price cap regulation is to be found in the public interest only if it is demonstrated that "such regulation is necessary to constrain the exercise of substantial market power".

An adjudication of a pipeline's regulatory status is to be completed within one year following the Secretary's decision to conduct it, unless the Secretary determines that unusual circumstances necessitate a delay, in which case the Secretary may take a maximum of two years to issue his finding. However, the Secretary must support the need for delay with specific findings regarding the relevant unusual circumstances. If, after conducting the proceeding, the Secretary finds that price cap regulation of the pipeline in the subject market is in the public interest, such regulation will continue indefinitely. If the Secretary does not so find, price cap regulation will terminate promptly. These provisions would also allow for settlement by contract of disputes regarding whether a particular pipeline should be subject to price cap regulation in a particular market.

Section 408(c) contains provisions for reconsideration, in the light of changed circumstances, whether price cap regulation of a given pipeline in a regulated market is in the public interest.

Section 408(d) provides for participation by the Attorney General in any adjudicatory proceeding regarding the regulatory status of a pipeline under section 408, and provides that in so doing the Attorney General shall be guided by the underlying definitions and assumptions of the 1986 study.

Section 408(e) provides that new pipelines—those that are not in service and not under construction on March 30, 1988—will not be subject either to existing Commission regulatory jurisdiction or to the new price cap regulation contained in section 410. The term "under construction" is not defined in the bill; it is intended that this term be construed to cover pipelines for which ground has been broken, or which otherwise have progressed under expectation of regulation to the point of preempting the development of an alternative pipeline serving the same markets.

Section 408(f) clarifies that (1) FERC regulation of, and, impliedly, and any FERC regulatory proceedings related to, oil or other products transported prior to deregulation of a pipeline will not be affected by that deregulation, (2) price cap regulation of a pipeline will be prospective only and not apply to previous transportation, and (3) FERC pipeline regulation terminated under section 408, including regulation of new pipelines, will not revert back to DOE, the ICC, or any other agency. Section 408(f) futher provides that pipeline regulation terminated under section 408 will not revert to any state agency, with the proviso, however, that existing state authority over intrastate pipeline transportation remains unchanged.

Section 408(g) explicitly authorizes the Secretary of Energy and the Attorney General to promulgate rules and regulations necessary or appropriate to carry out their responsibilities under section 408.

Section 408(h) provides for original, exclusive review in the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit of any petition for judicial review of any administrative action taken under section 408. This will expedite to the greatest extent possible such judicial review.

Section 408(h) also provides that any action for the Attorney General under section 408, including without limitation any decision to petition or not to petition for an adjudication of a pipeline's regulatory status, is deemed an action committed to agency discretion and not subject to judicial review.

SECTION 409—COMMON CARRIER STATUS: CONTRACTS

Section 409 contains the new, streamlined common carrier obligations that will be substituted for current, complex non-discrimination regulation under the Interstate Commerce Act when that regulation sunsets sixty days after the effective date of the Act. Section 409 also clarifies the authority of pipelines to enter into contracts for the transportation of oil and oil products.

Section 409(a) establishes the basic common carrier obligations of oil pipelines. It specifically provides that regulatory jurisdiction under this section does not extend to rate matters. While this section requires nondiscrimination as to access, terms and conditions under common carriage, it does not permit review of rates under that guise, in order to avoid "back-door" rate reregulation. Pipelines will be free to charge different rates to different shippers and may not be found to violate this section for that reason. Pipelines will be free to charge a rate that some shippers may be unwilling to pay, and these shippers may be "excluded" in that sense, but no rights are conferred by this section to change that situation in competitive markets. In competitive markets, customers have competitive alternatives to a particular pipeline; that is the best guarantee against any harm to consumers that might be caused by irrational price discrimination. In markets that are not competitive, price cap regulation will protect shippers. In addition, in all markets normal antitrust remedies remain available for anticompetitive actions.

Section 409(b) requires pipelines to publish and file the terms and conditions (other than rates) that apply to their standard common carriage transportation of oil and oil products.

Section 409(c) governs pipelines' contracts that differ from the standard common carriage terms and conditions. In order to ensure that businesses are free to enter into contracts that best meet their needs, without risk of intrusive regulation or challenges from disgruntled competitors, contracts are essentially removed from common carriage regulation. Common carriage remains as a "fall-back" or "base-line" option for all shippers; they will only use a contract if it better meets their needs.

Section 409(c) provides that in markets in which there is Commission rate regulation, contracts are permitted, but only so long as the regulated service is available at the maximum rate. This limitation is needed in order to prevent evasion of rate cap regulation. By "available" is meant freely available—shippers can obtain the regulated service at the maximum rate, free of capacity or other constraints.

For new pipelines, prospective customers and the prospective pipeline(s) are free to enter into contracts under this provision, since new pipelines will not be subject to Commission rate regulation. Such advance contracting can efficiently ensure that needed new pipelines will be built but will not harmfully exercise substantial market power over shippers, who will have competitive options at the contracting (pre-construction) phase and thus can protect themselves.

Section 409(d) authorizes the FERC to enforce compliance with section 409, and to promulgate any necessary rules and regulations.

SECTION 410—COMMISSION RATE REGULATION

Section 410 sets forth the new "price cap" regulatory scheme that will be substituted for current cost-of-service/rate-of-return regulation under the Interstate Commerce Act when such regulation sunsets sixty days after the effective date of the Act.

Section 410(a) provides that the new simplified price cap regulatory scheme is to be on a market-by-market basis.

Section 410(b) establishes the basics of price cap regulation. Section 410(b)(1) provides the first key component of price cap regulation—"base rates." These are established as recent rates that were not subject to FERC investigation (or that were finally adjudicated or were the subject of a settlement), increased by the Producer Price Index up to the effective date of the new price cap regulatory scheme.

Section 410(b)(2) allows for a one-time reduction of a base rate upon a showing that, due to pipeline market power, the base rate is "significantly higher" than would be predicted under competitive conditions. The Secretary shall only undertake a rate reduction in markets where the difference between the unadjusted base rate and the statistically predicted competitive rate is statistically significant (a commonly accepted standard for significance is that there should be less than a five percent probability that the difference was due to random fluctuations). In markets where rate reductions are appropriate according to this criterion, the Secretary would bring them in line with the rates that correspond to the statistically significant level (i.e., at 5%) rather than the statistically predicted rate.

A base rate adjustment proceeding can begin only after the Secretary has found that a pipeline has substantial market power under section 408. The procedures for such an inquiry parallel the section 408 procedures for determining whether a pipeline market will be subject to Commission rate regulation. Any such revision will be effective on the date the Secretary orders the reduction, or one year after the Secretary decides to conduct an adjudication, whichever comes first.

Section 410(b)(3) provides the other key component of price cap regulation—a new "Competitive Pipeline Price Index" ("CPPI") based on relative changes in pipeline rates in competitive unregulated markets. The Secretary will have discretion to select the data used to calculate the CPPI in order to create an index that accurately represents prices in markets with effective competition. The Secretary may use a substitute index, but only if he determines that calculation of the CPPI is unduly burdensome.

The Commission shall calculate, at least every six months, a maximum rate for each pipeline subject to price cap regulation based on base rates and cumulative changes in the CPPI. During a transition period, from the date of commencement of Commission rate regulation (sixty days after the effective date of the Act) until the date of publication of the list of adjudications required under section 408(b)(2)(C) (two hundred seventy days after the effective date of the Act) oil pipeline rate ceilings shall be frozen at base rate levels. The Producer Price Index will be used as the inflator/deflator of base rates for the next year, in order not to rely on changes in the CPPI during the early stages of deregulation, because such changes may be substantially influenced by an initial reaction to the termination of prior regulation.

Section 410(b)(4) establishes the lawfulness of all rates that do not exceed the maximum rates calculated in accordance with section 410(b)(3). This subsection also makes clear that any lower rate is also lawful. However, if a pipeline makes any such lower rate available to a shipper with which the pipeline is affiliated, then the pipeline is required to make the lower rate available to all shippers on the same terms and conditions.

Section 410(b)(5) requires FERC to publish base rates, rate adjustments, and maximum rates.

Section 410(c) contains an additional limitation on the actions of pipeline subject to price cap regulation in particular markets. This limitation is designed to prevent evasion of price cap regulation. Under this subsection, pipelines may not tie the taking of other products or services to pipeline services. This prevents pipelines from evading rate cap regulation by, e.g., charging an artificially high price for some unregulated good or service as a prerequisite for access to regulated pipeline service.

Section 410(d) provides for the non-regulation of expanded capacity in price-capped markets, in order to encourage such expansion. It also provides the Commission with explicit authority to promulgate regulations regarding allocation of rights to use pre-existing capacity in a manner consistent with effective Commission rate regulation and the common carrier requirements of section 409.

Section 410(e) authorizes the FERC to enforce section 410, and to promulgate any necessary rules and regulations.

Section 410(f) explicitly authorizes the Secretary and the Attorney General to promulgate any rules and regulations necessary or appropriate to carry out their responsibilities under section 410.

Section 410(g) provides for original, exclusive review in the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit of any petition for judicial review of any administrative action taken under section 410. This will expedite to the greatest extent possible such judicial review.

Section 410(g) also provides that any action of the Attorney General under section 410, including without limitation any decision to petition or not to petition for a rate reduction, is deemed an action committed to agency discretion and not subject to judicial review.

Section 411 provides for a report to Congress by the Secretary five years after all adjudications under section 410 have been concluded. This is to assure informed oversight by Congress as to the status of oil pipeline regulatory reform.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Section 4 of the act contains certain conforming amendments. It amends section 402(a) of the DOE Organization Act, 42 U.S.C. 7172(2), to clarify that the authorities and functions transferred by section 402(a) arte transferred subject to the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act. It also amends section 404(a) of the DOE Organization Act, 42 U.S.C. 7174(a), to clarify that the Secretary may issue regulations implementing the Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act without referring the rule to the FERC under Section 404.

APPLICABILITY OF ANTITRUST LAWS

Section 5 of the Act clarifies the continuing applicability of the antitrust laws to oil pipelines. The Act is not intended to affect in any manner the applicability of the antitrust laws to transportation of oil or products.

SEPARABILITY

Section 6 of the Act provides for separability should any of the Act's provisions or their application be held invalid.

SECRETARY OF ENERGY,
Washington, DC.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am pleased to transmit, on behalf of the Administration, a legislative proposal cited as the "Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988." The enclosed draft bill would amend the Department of Energy Organization Act to reduce and improve the economic regulation of oil pipelines. This proposed legislation is an initiative of the Presidential Task Force on Regulatory Relief, and its enactment would be in accord with the President's legislative program.

The Oil Pipeline Regulatory Reform Act of 1988 represents a consensus approach to the reform of oil pipelines. It permits rapid deregulation of most oil pipelines that operate in competitive markets. It creates a fair procedure to determine whether the remaining oil pipelines should be deregulated, but only after an inquiry into their competitiveness. The Act also reforms any residual regulation in a manner that promotes competition and reduces government oversight. The oil pipeline industry supports this initiative since it lessens government intrusion into a competitive industry.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that the presentation of this proposal for the consideration of the Congress is in accord with the program of the President.

Yours truly,

JOHN S. HERRINGTON.●

S. 2771. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to create a demonstration project that shall be administered by the Office of Substance Abuse Prevention, to provide treatment to babies born to women with substance abuse problems; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS FOR TREATMENT OF DRUG ADDICTED BABIES ACT

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I am joining with Senator DURENBERGER in introducing an act to provide for demonstration projects for the treatment of drug addicted babies. This bill would provide treatment to infants born of mothers who abused illegal substances during their pregnancy.

Every year an estimated 375,000 newborn infants suffer from drug-related health problems such as addiction. This is because at least 1 out of every 10 pregnant women use illegal drugs, and many more consume alcohol. Those who suffer the most are their newborn babies often born addicted to drugs, with low-birth weight, retardation, prenatal strokes, structural abnormalities and permanent brain damage.

Mother Clara Hale cares for some of these infants at the Hale House in Harlem. The Hale House provides care and medical treatment for infants and children whose addicted mother is seeking rehabilitation. The foundation of the Hale House is the family. Because of her efforts, mothers are able to successfully complete treatment and put their lives back together while their children receive medical treatment in a loving, homelike environment. Once the mother and child are well they are reunited. I have modeled my legislation on this program to provide other communities the chance to help drug addicted mothers and newborns.

Although it is ideal to treat mothers who are addicted to drugs at the earliest stages of pregnancy, it is not always possible. If we can't get to them beforehand, at least we can help these mothers and newborns, both of whom are physically addicted, after birth. This demonstration specifically addresses that need.

My legislation would provide grants to States to establish houses in between 3 and 5 cities for babies born of drug- and alcohol-addicted mothers. The purpose is to provide mothers with a safe place to leave their infants for treatment and medical care while they complete a separate rehabilitation program. Many women, particularly single mothers, would like to get help but cannot take their babies through rehabilitation with them and have no one else to care for the child. These babies have special treatment needs that residences, such as the Hale House, can handle in a homelike setting. This proposal would be authorized at $2 million in 1989 and $2 million in 1990.

Once mother and child have completed their respective treatment programs, the project requires coordination with other State and local agencies to provide the mother with job training and other skill development to help her successfully lead a drug free life. In addition, she will have received training in caring for the special needs of her child.

Mother Hale's efforts in Harlem are significant to every family she helps. Her efforts give families the ability to get back on track and provide infants with a better start in life. But there are too many who don't have access to that help. This bill will assist communities in establishing programs to target these families and help them get on the road to recovery.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2772. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the provision of drug treatment services for pregnant women; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

DRUG TREATMENT SERVICES FOR PREGNANT WOMEN

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am offering legislation to address the special treatment needs of substance abusing pregnant women.

Substance abuse in America has reached crisis proportions. The victims of this crisis who have been overlooked too often are the unborn children of alcohol or drug users. A recently completed study found that at least 11 percent of all hospitalized pregnant women, used illegal drugs during their pregnancies.

While some pregnant women do not seek treatment, many women who need assistance don't know where to turn or simply don't have the resources to get help. Even if they contact a treatment center, they are often put at the bottom of a 6- to 9-month waiting list. Why would a treatment center put a substance abusing woman with an affected unborn child at the bottom of the list? I'm told that the substance abuse treatment system is overflowing and treatment centers often shy away from taking on the liability risks and health problems of a pregnant woman.

The legislation I am introducing today approaches this problem in two ways: first, it mandates priority treatment for pregnant women; and second, it creates a demonstration project to create residential drug programs designed specificially for the needs of pregnant women.

My bill would require any drug treatment program which receives Federal assistance to give priority treatment to pregnant women. In other words, if there is a waiting list at a treatment center, a pregnant women must be moved to the top of that list and be given treatment when the next available slot is opened.

The residential drug program for pregnant women called for in my bill would provide a place for pregnant women to stay while obtaining treatment for their addiction and receiving prenatal care for their unborn children. The services would include outreach to identify substance abusing pregnant women and coordination with other State, local, and Federal programs designed to help the pregnant woman achieve independence and productivity such as job training and education. The authorization for this program would be $10 million for each year beginning in 1989 through 1991.

I believe it is imperative for us to address the needs of pregnant women who want help, but can't get it. We must make it clear that pregnant women deserve first priority for drug treatment. A future generation of unborn children depends on it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S. 2773. A bill entitled the Waste Minimization and Control Act of 1988, to amend the Solid Waste Disposal Act and extend the authorization through 1992; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

WASTE MINIMIZATION AND CONTROL ACT

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President I rise today to introduce for myself and Senator DURENBERGER, the Waste Minimization and Control Act of 1988. This legislation is needed to close a critical loophole in our Nation's environmental policy. This bill adds another chapter to our Nations commitment to environmental protection that Congress first began to tackle in the 1960's when we enacted the Solid Waste Act, and set Federal auto emission standards. That was more than two decades ago.

Since that time, we have seen a massive Federal regulatory commitment to air pollution control.

Since that time, we have witnessed a massive Federal regulatory and financial commitment to water pollution control.

Since that time, we have made a massive regulatory, financial and judicial assault on cleanup of hazardous waste dumps.

And since that time, America has become known as the world's largest producer of garbage—generating almost 12 billion tons of solid and hazardous waste every year;

A nation where the single largest export from the ports of New York State—nearly 44 percent—is waste;

A nation where we find hypodermic needles and vials of contaminated blood lining our beaches;

A nation that happily sends its most toxic waste to poison the soil and people of foreign lands;

And a nation that's home of the infamous garbage barge that wandered our coastal waters for months looking for a place to dump its load. It had to return home, just as the problem of solid waste has come home to us.

For too long Mr. President, Americans have viewed waste as useless junk. We've buried it until our "purple mountains" turn brown. We've burned it until our "spacious skies" rain toxins. And we've dumped it until infectious waste can be found from "sea to shining sea."

For America to be beautiful we need to change our ways. We must begin to treat our waste as a resource, not refuse. We must stop throwing away our future.

I believe America is ready for this change. Its time to change our wasteful habits. Its time to redirect our energies toward reducing waste, recycling more, and managing better.

It will be a difficult task. Just as the fight to clean the air and the water was long and difficult, so to will the fight to control solid waste.

We have to change habits. We have to devise whole new systems. And we have to better discipline ourselves.

The RCRA bill that I am introducing proposes many initiatives to start us in that new direction. It is not the final word. Only the first step in the process to reduce, recycle and better manage our wastes. It will set new standards for reducing and recycling waste. It will set tough minimum standards to ensure that the waste that we must produce is properly and safely managed. And it will provide the tools and resources to the States to help them achieve our goals.

The bill's recycling standards will be tough. It requires 25 percent recycling in 4 years. It sets a goal of 50 percent in 10 years. And it establishes waste minimization performance standards that certain manufacturers shall be required to meet in 10 years.

But simply establishing standards is not enough to ensure recycling. We must also create and expand our markets for recycled products. Thus, the bill requires the Federal Government to purchase more recycled paper, plastics and metals. Right now, purchases by the Federal Government account for about 8 percent of the GNP, so a Government-lead effort to use more recycled materials will create and expand the market for recycled products.

And finally, the bill will establish a Federal office within the Environmental Protection Agency to provide technical assistance on waste reduction and recycling opportunities and funds to States to carry out these opportunities.

To ensure that we properly manage the waste that we must produce or cannot recycle, the bill sets tough minimum standards for our most serious solid waste problems, including municipal garbage, incinerator ash, infectious waste and other industrial waste.

I recognize that many progressive States are already controlling many of these wastes. And I intend to take full advantage of these programs to avoid unnecessary duplication of controls. The minimum standards are, however, clearly intended to be a floor for those States which have sat on their hands.

Thus, rather than turning our beaches into a medical waste basket, the bill will set strict controls on the transportation, treatment, storage, and disposal of infectious wastes and other medical wastes.

And rather than having to live in a society that permits garbage barges from wandering our waterways, the bill will require every State to develop a comprehensive solid waste plan. Plans that ensure that there is a safe place to manage all waste generated in each State.

These plans will serve as a blueprint for implementing safe and effective State waste management programs. And will help us, for starters, to drydock every garbage barge carrying orphaned wastes.

And to ensure that our waste management practices are save and effective I propose to prohibit—by Federal law—any disposal or destruction of waste by landfill or combustion without a permit.

I will phase in this permit program for existing operations. And tie new permits to the creation of new programs to achieve our goals.

Finally, we need a mechanism to pay for this protection. The bill will establish a fee on virgin materials used for packaging at the rate of $7 per ton on packaging materials or seven-tenths of a cent per rigid container. This will encourage greater use of recycled materials and provide revenue that States and communities can use to develop and implement their programs.

The legislation avoids the "heavy hand of Washington" approach, but builds on the strength of State programs. Sure it sets tough goals for everyone. But it will also give the States what they need to make it work—the tools and resources to reach those goals.

And it gives States—in fact, it encourages States—to experiment with new options. To tap the creative strength of the Nation.

This is ambitious legislation. But our challenge is formidable. We are all now witnessing new serious environmental problems like global warming which is causing a national drought and higher crop prices, a garbage crisis that may bury us all, and the poorest air quality in years.

The legislation will help America put its new found awareness of the environment to work. Now. And it will pick up the torch of the environmental effort started in the 1960's.

The time has come for America to take the lead, not just to preserve the ozone layer or stop the destruction of our oceans. The time has come for America to dispose of the throw-away society. To make recycling a habit, not a hope. To provide incentives to stop disposing reusable materials and to penalize those commodities and products which by their nature cannot be recycled, reused or born again.

No country has the technology to do the job as do we. No country has the environmental movement which will insist that we do the job as do we. And no country has the incentive to find exportable ideas and technologies to do the job as effectively, as do we.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Waste Minimization and Control Act of 1988, and the Waste Minimization Revenue Act of 1988 and a summary of the provisions appear immediately following the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(1) Issue permits under state law that—

(A) meet the requirements of this section and assure compliance with any applicable standards promulgated by the Administrator under Section 4011 within eighteen months after such promulgation or such earlier date as the Administrator may by rule establish;

(B) can be revoked or modified for cause including, but not limited to, the violation of any condition of a permit or obtaining a permit by misrepresentation, or failure to disclose fully all relevant facts;

(2) Inspect, monitor, enter at reasonable times, and require reports to the extent necessary to assure compliance with this subtitle;

(iii) Within 12 months of enactment of this Act, and from time to time thereafter, the Administrator shall publish a notice in the Federal Register identifying any other solid waste categories for which standards are necessary or appropriate and specifying a schedule for promulgation of those standards. The Governor of any State may petition the Administrator to propose guidance for a category of waste not described in this paragraph.

(iv) At the time the Administrator grants any petition under Section 3001 of Subtitle C to exclude a waste generated at a particular facility, the Administrator shall specify any design or additional operating standard appropriate for such waste.

(d) Guidelines.—The guidelines promulgated by the Administrator pursuant to Subsection (a) shall provide for the protection of human health and the environment from the solid wastes within each category and shall take into consideration the circumstances presented by the particular solid waste category, as well as—

(1) the sources and volumes of the solid wastes within the category, including their toxicity, mobility or other potential for adverse impacts on human health and the environment;

(2) the potential danger, if any, to human health and the environment from current management practices;

(3) documented cases of actual or threatened harm to human health or the environment;

(4) the types of solid waste management facilities and measures that can be used to mitigate any potential adverse effect on human health and the environment that are appropriate for the solid wastes generated within each source category and consistent with the climatological and hydrogeological setting of the facility and proximity to biological or cultural resources and sources of drinking water. The Administrator shall promulgate as appropriate for each solid waste category design and operating measures that include but are not limited to:

(A) requirements with respect to siting of any source in the category including its proximity and vulnerable or unmonitorable groundwater;

(B) requirements with respect to construction quality assurance with respect to installation of any source in the category;

(C) requirements with respect to licensing or training for persons who install or operate any source in the category;

(D) requirements with respect to design of any source in the category including liners, leachate collection systems and cover requirements;

(H) requirements for maintaining evidence of financial responsibility for closure, post-closure care, and corrective action;

(5) other Federal and state laws and regulations with a view toward avoiding duplication of effort.

(c)(1) MUNICIPAL SOLID WASTE LANDFILLS.—Regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(1) of this section shall include, at a minimum, for each new and existing landfill the following requirements—

(A) controls to detect and prevent the disposal of hazardous waste, non-hazardous bulk liquids and non-hazardous liquids in containers (other than household wastes). Such controls shall include random inspections of incoming loads, inspection of suspicious loads, records of inspections, training of facility personnel to recognize illegal materials, procedures for notifying the proper authorities if any regulated hazardous wastes, is found, and precautions and penalties to prevent such offenses.

(B) daily cover as necessary to control disease vectors, fires, odors, blowing litter and scavenging.

(C) landfill gas monitoring and controls to ensure that concentrations of explosive gases beneath, around or in facility structures (excluding gas control or recovery components) shall not exceed twenty-five percent of the lower explosive limit for methane, or such level as the Administrator finds will control and recapture emissions of landfill generated gases to the maximum extent feasible. Such concentrations shall not exceed the lower explosive limit at the property boundary (or perimeter of a dedicated buffer zone).

(D) access controls to protect human health and the environment and to prevent unauthorized vehicular traffic and to prevent illegal dumping of wastes.

(E) run-on and run-off controls that will accommodate a 24-hour, 25-year storm without overtopping and with sufficient freeboard to accommodate expected set-up and wave action; diversion of all run-on around the landfill by means of ditches, berms, dikes or grading, and relocation of surface water bodies to flow around the perimeter of the landfill.

(F) landfill closure that:

(i) minimizes the need for further maintenance

(ii) ensures no adverse effects will be caused from post-closure releases to the groundwater, surface water or atmosphere.

(G) closure and post-closure care plans which identify for each facility the steps necessary to ensure closure and post-closure, time estimates, modifications to monitoring and collection systems, final cover and cost estimates. The post-closure care period shall be determined by results from the monitoring in the landfill including leachate quality and quantity and methane gas generation.

(H) financial responsibility for closure and post-closure care.

(I) ground water monitoring provided that, the Administrator is authorized to promulgate regulations to allow a variance from ground water monitoring requirements if the owner or operator can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Administrator that there is no potential for migration of hazardous constituents from the landfill to the uppermost aquifer. The demonstration shall be certified by a qualified geologist or geotechnical engineer and shall be based on site specific data.

(J) corrective action of releases to air, water and land to protect health and environment.

(2) At a minimum the regulations required under subsection (b) of this section shall require for each new landfill and lateral expansions to existing landfills for which new permits are required the following requirements—

(A) Liners (natural or man-made materials or both) or in-situ soil, or combination of both, capable of preventing the migration of wastes or leachate out of the landfill to the aquifer or surface water during the active life of the facility.

(B) Leachate collection and removal systems installed immediately above the liner, which shall be sufficiently permeable to allow the leachate collection and removal system to function, and designed and constructed to maintain less than 30 centimeters of leachate head from the landfill during the active life and post-closure care period.

(C) Construction quality assurance plan specifying the materials to be used in liner construction, the construction techniques, the engineering plan, the installation test procedures, and a description of the methods to be used to modify work which does not meet project specifications.

(D) Landfills shall not be located in the following locations:

(i) within the 100-year flood plain unless it can be demonstrated by the owner or operator that engineering measures have been incorporated into the landfill design to ensure the landfill shall not restrict the flow of the 100-year base flood, reduce the temporary water shortage capacity of the floodplain, or result in the washout of solid waste so as to pose a hazard to human health or the environment;

(ii) within a wetland except in accordance with section 301 of the Clean Water Act;

(iii) within 200 feet of a fault that has had displacement in Holocene time.

(iv) within a seismic impact zone and other unstable areas unless it can be demonstrated by the owner or operator that engineering measures have been incorporated into the landfill design to ensure the structural stability of the landfill capable of protecting human health and the environment.

(c)(1) MUNICIPAL INCINERATOR ASH.—Regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(2) of this section for facilities in which municipal ash is disposed shall require at a minimum—

(A) the installation of two or more liners and a leachate collection system above and between such liners, in accordance with paragraph (2) in this subsection; and

(B) groundwater monitoring.

(2) The requirement of paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection may be satisfied by the installation of an upper liner under the waste designed, operated, and constructed of materials to prevent the migration of any constituent into such liner during the period such facility remains in operation (including any post-closure monitoring period), and a lower liner designed, operated, and constructed to prevent the migration of any constituent through such liner during such period. For the purpose of the preceding sentence, a lower liner shall be deemed to satisfy such requirement if it is constructed of at least a 3-foot thick layer of recompacted clay or other natural material with a hydraulic conductivity of no more than 1 × 10^{-7} centimeter per second.

(3) Notwithstanding the requirement of paragraph (1)(A), regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(2) may provide for the placement of ash from municipal waste incineration units in a monofill (containing only ash from such units) with a composite liner (including a synthetic liner constructed of high density polyethylene of 60-mil thickness or equivalent material and a lower liner in compliance with design requirements for lower liners under paragraph (2)), ground water monitoring and leachate collection. Requirements under this paragraph are minimum requirements and the Administrator shall promulgate more stringent requirements applicable where necessary to assure that releases from a monofill will not contaminate ground water or surface water or otherwise pose a threat of adverse effects on human health or the environment.

(4) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(2) shall allow disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units in sanitary landfills meeting the requirements of revised criteria promulgated under subsection (a)(1), if such has undergone treatment in accordance with regulations for such treatment promulgated under subsection (5) and such ash is tested and does not fail any criteria established under subsection (5). For purposes of this section, treatment means any method, technique, or process designed to change the physical, chemical, or biological character or composition of any ash so as to remove or fix in place any constituent of the ash which, in the event of mismanagement during transportation, storage, reuse or disposal, would pose a threat to human health or the environment. For the purposes of this section, the mixing of fly ash and bottom ash, or the mixing of such ash with other solid waste, without the introduction of chemical stabilization agents, does not constitute treatment.

(5)(A) For the purposes of developing regulations for the management, handling, storage, treatment, transportation, reuse, and disposal of ash from municipal waste incineration units under this section that protect the Administrator shall promulgate criteria and testing procedures for identifying the characteristics of ash from municipal waste incineration units that may pose a hazard to human health or the environment. In considering potential hazards to human health and the environment, the Administrator shall consider all potential pathways of human or environmental exposure to constituents of such ash, including, but not limited to, inhalation, ingestion as a consequence of incorporation of the ash or any constituent into the food chain, ingestion of potable water or aquatic organisms contaminated by surface runoff, leaching or percolation of such ash or its constituents into groundwater or surface water, ingestion or inhalation of soil particles contaminated with such ash, and dermal contact with such ash (including, for all such pathways, situations of disposal or reuse). At a minimum, the Administrator shall consider appropriate methods to determine leaching, total chemical analysis, respirability, and toxicity. The criteria and accompaning testing procedures promulgated by the Administrator under this subsection shall reflect the heterogeneous characteristics of municipal solid waste and municipal incinerator ash, including seasonal variations in the constituents of such solid waste and ash. Leaching procedures established under this subsection shall include testing under acidic and native conditions. Test leachate from any ash containing a substance in concentrations exceeding the maximum contaminant level for such substance established pursuant to section 1412 of the Safe Drinking Water Act by a factor of one hundred or more shall constitute a failure of the test required by this section.

(B) The Administrator may require the owner or operator of any municipal waste incineration unit or any facility handling, transporting, storing, treating, reusing, recycling, or disposing (pursuant to subsection (4) of ash from such unit to test such ash in accordance with the criteria and testing procedures promulgated under this subsection. If fly ash and bottom ash are combined, such combined ash must also be tested in accordance with such criteria and testing procedures.

(C) Any ash which fails in any characteristic under the criteria and testing procedures promulgated by the Administrator under this subsection shall be disposed of in compliance with subsection (1), or shall be treated (as defined in section 1004(34)) in accordance with regulations promulgated under subsection (a) (2) and shall only be reused if such treated ash is determined to be nonhazardous as defined in section 3001.

(6) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a) (2) shall require an enforceable schedule for corrective action for all releases of hazardous constituents from any solid waste management unit at a facility seeking a permit under section 4010, regardless of the time at which waste was placed in such unit.

(7) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(2) shall establish requirements for the proper closure of facilities treating, storing, or disposing of ash from municipal waste incineration units, for the post-closure monitoring care of such facilities of not less than 30 years, and for assurances of financial responsibility for closure, post-closure care and corrective action.

(d)(1) MUNICIPAL INCINERATOR EMISSIONS.—Regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(3) of this section shall require performance standards to control emissions of air pollutants into the ambient air from each municipal waste incineration unit which begins operations after January 1, 1989 or which is not substantially completed before such date. The standards promulgated under subsection (a)(3) shall reflect the greatest degree of emission limitation achievable through application of the best available control technologies and practices which the Administrator determines at the time of promulgation (or revision, in the case of a revision of a standard) has been achieved in practice by 5 or more municipal waste incineration units excluding periods of malfunction or misoperation. In establishing standards under subsection (a)(3) the Administrator may distinguish between types and classes of municipal incineration units based on combustion technology or pollution control systems. In no event shall the standards promulgated under subsection (a)(3) permit such municipal waste incineration units to emit any pollutant in excess of the amount allowable under any applicable new source standards of performance. Standards shall be based on methods and technologies for removal or destruction of pollutants before, during, or after combustion, and shall incorporate siting requirements that minimize, on a site-specific basis, to the maximum extent practicable, any potential risk to human health or the environment. The following practices and control technologies, used individually, in combination with one another, or in combination with other available practices or control technologies not identified in this paragraph, shall be deemed available for purposes of this paragraph: electrostatic precipitators, fabric filtration, flue gas scrubbers, spray dry scrubbers, negative air flow, and good combustion practices, including availability of auxiliary fuel to maintain specific temperatures. In adopting standards of performance, the Administrator may take into consideration other technologies and practices that, either by themselves or in combination with other technologies or practices, may achieve a greater degree of emission reduction for the pollutants specified in paragraph (2), (A) including the use of selective or non-selective catalytic reduction, wet flue gas denitrification, selective non-catalytic reduction, wet scrubbing, or catalytic oxidation. The Administration may require new facilities to be constructed according to designs which allow for addition of selective catalytic reduction, and other technologies, as they become available, except that selective catalytic reduction may not be required at units which have installed active control technologies for control of emissions of oxides of nitrogen prior to the date of enactment of this section.

"(2)(A) The regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(3) shall specify numerical emission limitations for the following substances or mixtures: particulate matter (total and fine), opacity, sulfur dioxide, hydrogen chloride, oxides of nitrogen, carbon monoxide, lead, cadmium, mercury, halogenated organic compounds, dioxins, and dibenzofurans. In establishing such standards of performance the Administrator shall take into account the use of numerical standards or other methods to reduce the presence in air emissions or ash from a municipal waste incineration unit of each of the following additional substances: volatile organic compounds, beryllium, hydrogen fluoride, antimony, arsenic, barium, chromium, cobalt, copper, nickel, selenium, zinc, polychlorinated biphenyls, chlorobenzenes, chlorophenols, and polynuclear aromatic hydrocarbons.

"(B) The regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(3) may be expressed in terms of the post-combustion concentration of surrogate substances or periods of residence time in excess of stated temperatures. In no event shall any such standard allow an outlet gas carbon monoxide concentration greater than 50 parts per million on a 4-hour average; an outlet gas particulate concentration greater than 0.010 grains per dry standard cubic foot corrected to 7 percent oxygen, an outlet gas concentration of sulfur dioxide greater than 40 parts per million on a 3-hour average, unless uncontrolled emissions of sulfur dioxide are reduced by not less than 70 percent; an outlet gas concentration of hydrogen chloride greater than 30 parts per million on a 3-hour average, unless uncontrolled hydrogen chloride emissions are reduced by not less than 90 percent; or a retention temperature and time of less than 1800 degrees Fahrenheit or less than 1 second at fully mixed height (or the equivalent). Standards promulgated under subsection (a)(3) may allow an outlet gas carbon monoxide concentration greater than 50 parts per million during 1 per centum of the operating period in any month provided that such concentration shall not exceed 100 parts per million averaged over four years. Compliance with particulate standards promulgated under this subsection (a)(3) may be demonstrated by an average concentration calculated on the basis of three tests taken at intervals scheduled by the permitting authority. The Administrator may establish standards for combustion parameters (including temperature) other than those stated in this paragraph for units employing atmospheric-fluidized bed boilers for the control of oxides of nitrogen, provided that such standards achieve a combustion efficiency equivalent to that required of other units.

"(3)(A) The regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(3) shall control emissions of air pollutants into the ambient air from each municipal waste incineration unit which is in operation or which is substantially completed prior to January 1, 1989. Such standards of performance shall be established on the basis of the degree of emission limitation achievable through application of available control technologies and practices as determined under subsection (a)(1), and shall specify emission limitations for the substances required under subsection (a)(2). In no event shall any such standard allow an outlet gas carbon monoxide concentration greater than 100 parts per million on a 4-hour average; an outlet gas particulate concentration greater than 0.020 grains per dry standard cubic foot corrected to 7 percent oxygen; an outlet gas concentration of sulfur dioxide greater than 60 parts per million on a 3-hour average, unless uncontrolled emissions of sulfur dioxide are reduced by 70 percent; an outlet gas concentration of hydrogen chloride of 45 parts per million on a 3-hour average, unless uncontrolled emissions of hydrogen chloride are reduced by 90 percent; or a retention temperature and time of less than 1800 degrees Fahrenheit or less than 1 second at fully mixed height (or the equivalent). The Administrator is authorized to establish a standard allowing an outlet gas carbon monoxide concentration no greater than 200 parts per million on an 8-hour average, for any municipal waste incineration unit in operation before January 1, 1989 that controls emissions of dioxins and dibenzofurans using acid gas scrubber and fabric filtration control technology. Standards imposed under subsection (a)(3) may allow an outlet gas carbon monoxide concentration greater than 100 parts per million during 1 per centum of the operating period in any month provided that such concentration shall not exceed 200 parts per million averaged over four hours. Compliance with particulate standards promulgated under subsection (a)(3) may be demonstrated by an average concentration calculated on the basis of three tests taken at intervals scheduled by the permitting authority.

(B) The Administrator shall promulgate a schedule for compliance with the standards promulgated under subsection (a)(3). The schedule shall take into account the remaining useful life of the unit, the extent to which emissions from the unit threatens human health or the environment, and such other factors as the Administrator deems appropriate. In no event shall such schedule provide for compliance with such standards after a date—

(i) 8 years after the date of enactment, if the cost for the addition of required pollution control equipment will be more than 80 percent of the unit's actual and projected capital cost absent such equipment,

(ii) 7 years after the date of enactment, if the cost for the addition of required pollution control equipment will be more than 40 percent, but no greater than 80 percent, of the unit's actual projected capital cost absent such equipment,

(iii) 6 years after the date of enactment, if the cost of the addition of required pollution control equipment will be more than 20 percent, but no greater than 40 percent, of the unit's actual and projected capital cost absent such equipment, or

(iv) 5 years after the date of enactment, if the cost for the addition of required pollution control equipment will be 20 percent or less of the unit's actual and projected capital cost absent such equipment.

For purposes of this subsection, the term "actual and projected capital cost" includes any actual expenditures and funds obligated to be spent pursuant to binding agreements or contractual obligations, which cannot be canceled or modified without substantial loss to the owner or operator of the unit, for the construction and installation of the unit (not including the cost of any land purchased in connection with construction or installation). Each owner or operator of an existing municipal incineration unit shall submit to the Administrator within 24 months after the promulgation of regulation under subsection (a)(3) a statement of the amount of such actual and projected capital costs of the unit and estimated costs of pollution control equipment. For each unit, the Administrator shall review and audit such estimates and actual and projected costs as 2-year intervals following the 24-month period and revise the schedule under this subsection accordingly, taking into account changed circumstances.

(4) The regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(3) shall require the owner or operator of each municipal waste incineration unit (A) to monitor emissions from the unit at the point at which such emissions are emitted into the ambient air and at such other points as necessary to protect human health and the environment (B) to monitor such other parameters relating to the operation of the unit and its pollution control technology as the Administrator determines are appropriate, (C) and to report the results of such monitoring. Such regulations shall contain provisions regarding the frequency of monitoring, test methods and procedures, and the form and frequency of reports containing the results of monitoring, and shall require that any monitoring reports or test results indicating exceedences of standards under this section shall be reported separately and in a manner that facilitates review for purposes of enforcement actions. Such regulations shall require that copies of the results of such monitoring be maintained on file at the facility concerned and that such copies shall be made available for inspection and copying by interested members of the public during business hours.

(5)(A) Regulations promulgated under subsection (a)(3) shall, at a minimum, require continuous monitoring for the following: opacity, hydrogen chloride (if such monitoring device or method is available), sulfur dioxide, oxides of nitrogen, carbon monoxide, carbon dioxide, oxygen, stack temperature, and furnace temperature (or secondary combustion zone temperature, as appropriate).

"(B) For all emissions subject to standards under subsection (a)(3) that are not subject to continuous monitoring under subparagraph (A), the regulations promulgated under this subsection shall require periodic monitoring of such emissions at each municipal waste incineration unit not less frequently than—

(a) Section 5009 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is added to read as follows:

"(a) FEDERAL CONTRACTS.—Any federal agency which contracts with any private party or other Federal agency shall, with respect to any contract for $1 million or more, require such contractor to use recycled materials in performance of the contract. Such agency shall, in consultation with EPA and pursuant to EPA guidelines on recycled materials required under section 6005, include in specifications for such contract those aspects of contract performance which can be fulfilled with recycled materials. No requirement to use recycled materials may be imposed when the contractor certifies the material is not available or not available at a cost of not more than 10 percent more than non-recycled materials."

SEC. 310. HAZARDOUS CONSTITUENTS IN PRODUCTS.

(a) Section 5010 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is added to read as follows:

"(a) INFORMATION COLLECTION ON HAZARDOUS CONSTITUENTS IN PRODUCTS.—The administrator shall determine the extent to which hazardous substances in section (101)(14) of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986 are contained in products distributed in commerce. Not later than one year after enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall publish and submit to Congress a list of no less than ten products, which identifies hazardous substances most frequently found in such products which present a risk to human health and the environment when incinerated or disposed of. The Administrator shall update this list with no less than ten new products each year, and publish and submit to Congress a revised list on an annual basis.

(c) Not later than six months after date of submission of the information required in subsection (a) the Administrator shall determine whether to promulgate regulations under subsection (b). If the Administrator determines that regulation under subsection (b) will not adequately protect human health and the environment, he shall establish a schedule not to exceed 24 months for review pursuant to section 6 of the Toxic Substances Control Act to regulate the products in which the hazardous substances are contained.

(d) Effective 12 months after the date of enactment of this section, the land disposal and incineration of lead-acid batteries and mercury batteries is prohibited. Effective 12 months after date of enactment of this section land disposal of unshredded tires is prohibited.

In development of such regulations, the Administrator shall conduct an analysis of the economic impact of the regulations on the lead-acid battery and mercury battery recycling industry. The Administrator shall ensure that such regulations do not discourage the recovery or recycling of lead-acid and mercury batteries consistent with protection of human health and the environment.

(f) No person may recover, under the authority of subsection (a)(3) or (a)(4) of section 107 of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, from a lead-acid battery or mercury battery recycler for any response costs or damages resulting from a release or threatened release of recycled lead-acid batteries or mercury batteries, or use the authority of section 106 of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, from a lead-acid battery or mercury battery recycler other than a person described in subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) of section 107 of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, if such recycled batteries—

(A) is not mixed with any other hazardous substance, and

(B) is stored, treated, transported, or otherwise managed in compliance with regulations or standards promulgated pursuant to subsection (g) of this section.

Nothing in this paragraph shall affect or modify in any way the obligations or liability of any person under any other provision of State or Federal law, including common law for damages, injury, or loss resulting from a release or threatened release of any hazardous substance or for removal or remedial action or the costs of removal or remedial action."

SEC. 311. FEDERAL PROCUREMENT.

(a) Section 6002 (a) Subsection (c)(1)(C) of Subtitle F of RCRA is amended as follows—"(C) are only available at an unreasonable price. A price is unreasonable if it exceeds by more than 10 percent the price of alternative items. Any determination under subparagraph (B) shall be made in the basis of the guidelines of the Bureau of Standards in any case in which such material is covered by such guidelines."

(b) A new subsection 6005 is added to read as follows—

"(a) SPECIFIED EPA GUIDELINES.—Within 12 months after enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall re-issue its paper procurement guidelines to ensure that they are consistent with the requirement of section 6002(c)(1)(C). The Administrator shall also promulgate final procurement guidelines requiring the use of—

(1) recycled lead in lead-acid batteries;

(2) used tire fragments in road cover;

(3) compost from yard waste and sewage sludge;

(4) recycled plastic from discarded bottles;

(b) If EPA fails to issue a procurement guideline specified in subsection (a) within the time specified, federal agencies shall not authorize, fund, or carry out any action except in accordance with the conditions below insofar as they pertain to that guideline—

(1) any lead-acid batteries purchased shall contain a minimum of 50 percent recycled lead;

(2) at least 50 percent of road cover applications shall incorporate used tire fragments;

(3) any paper, plastics, steel, glass or aluminum purchased shall contain a minimum of 50 percent recycled content, unless such items are not available at a reasonable cost and of adequate quality;

(4) compost shall be used in lieu of alternative materials for plant nutrition, cover or fill on public land and interstate highways unless not available or capable of serving the purpose intended."

Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986 for recyclers of these batteries. (2) Requires EPA to publish a list identifying hazardous substances most frequently found in products which present risk when incinerated or disposed of. (3) Requires EPA to promulgate regulations for the disposal or incineration of products containing hazardous substances of concern or conduct a review pursuant to section 6 of the Toxic Substances Control Act to regulate such products containing the hazardous substances.

Section 311. Federal Procurement

This section (1) requires the Federal procurement of recycled materials if the recycled materials are available at no more than 10 percent the price of alternative items. (2) Requires EPA to promulgate procurement guidelines for recycled lead in lead-acid batteries; used tire fragments in road cover; compost from yard waste and sewage sludge; recycled plastic from discarded bottles; recycled steel from discarded cans; and recycled glass from discarded containers, and recycled aluminum from discarded cans. WASTE MINIMIZATION AND CONTROL ACT OF 1988

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator BAUCUS today to introduce the Waste Minimization and Control Act of 1988. The Senator from Montana is to be commended for the hard work and vision that is reflected in this legislation and for the leadership that he has shown here in the Congress on the solid waste disposal crisis.

And, Mr. President, there can be no doubt that the Nation is facing a solid waste disposal crisis. The volume of things we throw away in this society continues to increase rapidly each year, while our ability to locate and build secure disposal facilities diminishes. Although the crisis is not acute in every community in the country some States project that their waste disposal capacity will be completely exhausted in 5 years or less.

In other communities the crisis has already driven disposal costs to $100 or more per ton. Garbage is being shipped by truck on our highways for several hundred miles to reach landfills with capacity to handle the refuse of our urban centers.

In large part, this is a capacity crisis. More garbage than we have places to put it. So any effort we make here in the Congress to ease the crisis must recognize that more capacity and new options for treating, reusing and disposing of waste are a necessary part of the solution.

But underneath the volume issues—the high costs and long hauls—there are also environmental concerns that are driving the crisis. It's also a crisis of confidence. Our old landfills are not only filling up quickly, but we are unable to site and construct new units because the public does not have confidence that the environment and public health can be fully protected.

It is difficult for the Federal Government to play an effective role on these twin issues—capacity and safety. Local government has traditionally carried the responsibility for handling and disposing trash. And States have the lead role in establishing standards and processes for siting new facilities. Shaping a constructive Federal role in light of these traditional State and local responsibilities requires a careful and balanced approach. I believe that Senator BAUCUS has achieved that balance in this legislation.

It starts with a commitment to waste reduction and recycling as our preferred course of action. The bill sets a national goal of 25 percent recycling of the municipal waste stream within 4 years. And commits us to 10 percent waste reduction in that same period. That's a very ambitious goal.

The bill also includes standards for municipal waste incinerators, both for the air emissions from incinerators and for disposal of the ash which they generate. Incinerators are an important intermediate step in the waste disposal process between recycling and ultimate disposal because they can reduce the volume of the waste stream by 70 to 90 percent.

On the other side—the safety side—this legislation imposes stringent Federal requirements on landfills which handle municipal waste. These requirements would include liners, leachate collection and ground water monitoring. Less than 10 percent of the 6,000 landfills now receiving municipal waste currently meet these requirements. But our whole experience in this area suggests that they are minimum technology for secure landfill units. Hopefully, these new requirements will increase public confidence so that we can get on with the job of siting and constructing a new generation of solid waste facilities. The waste has to go somewhere and the environment damage done by expanding old units—poorly sited and ill-designed—is by orders of magnitude worse than any threat which may be posed by facilities meeting the standards outlined in this bill.

I am very pleased that Senator BAUCUS has included in this legislation my proposal for a National Packaging Institute. I think the public-private partnership which is reflected in the structure of this proposed institute could make a big contribution to easing the solid waste disposal crisis. Packaging, the containers and wrappers and minibillboards, that the American economy uses to add convenience and appeal to commercial products is one of the most rapidly increasing elements of the municipal waste stream. Statistics presented to the Environment Committee indicate that packaging volume has increased by 30 percent over the past 10 years. Something like 10 cents of every consumer dollar is now spent to cover the costs of packaging—not the product but the package it comes in. And the high cost of convenience doesn't end. The package must be disposed of, once the product is consumed.

But packaging is not amenable to straightforward government regulation. How much packaging is too much for a particular product? When does a retailer's right to use packaging to encourage sales or meet the convenience needs of a consumer become unreasonable in light of the public need to control the growth of the waste stream? These are not questions that governments can easily answer. Some States have tried but without significant success.

The National Packaging Institute proposed in this bill is an attempt to deal in a new way with the packaging explosion. The idea is to convince the consumer that smaller, recyclable packages made of nontoxic materials are better than the big, gaudy jumble of plastic, paper and metal that we have come to expect.

The institute—which will not be a government regulator, but a voluntary private-sector watchdog—will develop standards for a good package, one that appropriately conserves resources, is easy to handle in the waste stream, is recyclable or without negative environmental effect when disposed. Those selling products in packages which can meet these standards will be authorized to use a special symbol developed by the institute. EPA will use Government funds to sponsor public service advertising encouraging consumers to look for that symbol and to take packaging characteristics into account when making purchasing decisions.

As this legislation is considered by the Environment Committee and by the Senate, I will ask that we thoroughly consider some additional measures which would contribute to an easing of the solid waste crisis. I would mention three today. First, meeting the goals of this bill for recycling and waste reduction will surely require that households separate their wastes into several different streams and that each stream be collected separately. Experience indicates that voluntary source separation will not support the recycling goals of this bill and mandatory curbside programs will need to be adopted in our largest communities where collection of multiple streams is economic.

Second, we need to do more to remove the hazardous constituents from common household products. This legislation requires the Administrator to study the composition of household products which may contain hazardous substances to determine whether disposal of such products would present any threat to health. The Administrator may then take action under the Toxic Substances Control Act to remove any threat which is present. I think this language could be strengthened. Past experience demonstrates that we need to focus this work on specific threats and to set deadlines for EPA action. I favor an approach that would select a few of the most serious problems—for instance, lead and cadmium and other heavy metals—and require the Administrator to take action to remove risks within a 3- or 4-year period of time.

The other item I would mention is household hazardous waste collection programs. I hope that we will consider Federal incentives to local governments to encourage hazardous waste pickup programs. We also need to remove impediments—like liability for releases from disposal sites—for the communities which conduct such programs.

Mr. President, this is a very good start on RCRA reauthorization. We will need to add other elements on hazardous waste management and storage tanks as we move along. But this is a core for a very good RCRA reauthorization with waste reduction and recycling as the principal theme and I am pleased to join with Senator Baucus to introduce it.

Finally, Mr. President, I ask that a very thoughtful speech which the Senator from Montana gave to the National Solid Waste Management Association conference on Wednesday of this week be printed in the Record at this point.

The speech follows:

National Solid Waste Management Association

(Keynote Address by Senator Max Baucus)

I want to thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to you this morning. And thank you Gene for that introduction.

I'm here today to talk about America's new sexy issue: garbage.

We know our issue has "arrived" when it becomes a focus of the Presidential campaign. And on the cover of the news weeklies. Who knows? Maybe the waste issue will lead to a new TV series: "Hazardous waste of the rich and famous . . ."

When you have a major network news organization—in this case ABC News—devoting an entire week of special segments on the environment, you can bet it is an issue they know will attract viewers. It is a good sign that people are concerned about the environment.

That's good news for all of us in this room. It means the public's attention is focused on the issue. That creates an opportunity for change. It is that opportunity that I intend to take advantage of.

For too long Americans have viewed waste as useless junk. We've buried it until our "purple mountains" turn brown. We've burned it until our "spacious skies" rain toxins. And we've dumped it until infectious waste can be found from "sea to shining sea."

For America to be beautiful we need to change our ways. We must begin to treat our waste as a resource, not refuse. We must stop throwing away our future.

I believe America is ready for this change.

We no longer want to be known as the world's largest producer of garbage. We Americans don't want the 12 billion tons of solid and hazardous waste we generate every year to become our next national monument.

We no longer want the single largest export—nearly 44 percent of the tonnage—from the ports of New York State to be waste.

We no longer want to find hypodermic needles and vials of contaminated blood lining our beaches.

And we no longer want America to be a nation that happily sends its most toxic waste to poison the soil and people of foreign lands.

Let's not forget the infamous garbage barge that wandered our coastal waters for months, looking for a place to dump its load. It had to return home, just as the problem of solid waste has come home to us.

Fortunately, all of these examples have helped Americans realize that today's waste problem effects all of us. It is no longer viewed as the other guy's problem. I am reminded of a favorite Pogo cartoon where its star says "I have met the enemy, and he is us!"

Much of our waste problems exist because we live in a consumption society and in a consumption world. Freedom of choice, private enterprise, rising levels of income and expectations, and lack of government leadership have yielded a society in which consumption—almost without regard to environmental costs—has become the rule.

However, our country does have a record of confronting environmental problems. It isn't perfect; but we have tried.

Over 30 years ago Congress first addressed the problem of solid waste by enacting the Solid Waste Act. That was in 1965. We all remember that at that time solid waste was a rat problem, a garbage problem, a litter problem.

Our nation also made a massive commitment to control air pollution. In 1963 we passed the Clear Air Act to study air pollution and to provide grants to state and local governments to control it. In 1970 Congress amended the Act to add tougher new controls of criteria air pollutants.

From air we turned to water, passing the Clean Water Act in 1972 to help restore and maintain the nation's waters.

Our most recent effort was a three pronged regulatory, financial and judicial assault to clean up hazardous waste dumps. Congress passed RCRA in 1976 and created Superfund in 1980.

Today we face the solid waste problem again—though it is not the same dragon of the 1960's. As we all know, this year America will bury about 85 percent of our garbage in about 6,000 currently operating municipal landfills. Unfortunately, over half of those landfills will run out of capacity within ten years.

We have come full circle. We must turn our attention from the air and water and focus on the land.

A new standard must be set to help America find ways to reduce the staggering volume and waste that it generates. To help us recycle more of what we cannot reduce, and better manage what we cannot recycle.

To do this, we need tough, new environmental legislation. When I return to Washington today I will introduce a comprehensive RCRA reauthorization bill to help our country tackle our mounting waste problem.

It will be a difficult task. Just as the fight to clean the air and clean the water was long and difficult, so too will be the fight to control solid waste.

We have to change habits. We have to devise whole new systems. In short, we have to better discipline ourselves.

The RCRA bill proposes many initiatives to start us in that new direction. In short, it will set new standards for reducing and recycling waste. It will set tough minimum standards to ensure that the waste that we must produce is properly and safely managed. And it will provide tools and resources to the states to help them achieve our goals.

The bill's recycling standards will be tough. It requires 25 percent recycling in four years. It sets a goal of 50 percent in ten years. And it establishes waste minimization performance standards that certain manufacturers shall be required to meet in 10 years.

It requires the federal government to purchase more recycled paper, plastics and metals. Right now government purchases account for about eight percent of the GNP. A government-lead effort to use more recycled materials will create and expand the market for recycled products.

And to further encourage recycling, my bill will establish a federal office within the Environmental Protection Agency to provide technical assistance on waste reduction and recycling opportunities, and funds to states to carry out these opportunities.

To ensure that we properly manage the waste that we produce or cannot recycle, my bill sets tough minimum standards for our most serious solid waste problems, including municipal garbage, incinerator ash, infectious waste, and other industrial waste.

Thus, rather than turning our beaches into a medical wastebasket, I intend to set strict controls on the transportation, treatment, storage and disposal of infectious and other medical wastes.

And, rather than having to live in a society that permits garbage barges from wandering our waterways, my bill will require every state to develop a comprehensive solid waste plan. Plans that ensure that there is a safe place to manage all waste generated in each state.

These plans will serve as a blueprint for implementing safe and effective state waste management programs. And they will help us to dry dock every garbage barge carrying orphaned wastes.

The standards will not create a burden for progressive states. They are, however, clearly intended to be a floor for those states which have sat on their hands.

To accomplish this ambitious agenda we need an effective way to assure a complete evaluation of available alternatives. We need a method to force careful review of the environmental implications and a structurally sound regulatory program.

To do that, I propose to prohibit—by federal law—any disposal or destruction of waste by landfill or combustion without a permit.

The permit will be used as a means to ensure safe and effective waste management.

I will phase in this permit program for existing operations. And tie new permits to the creation of new programs to achieve our goals.

Finally, we need a mechanism to pay for this protection. My bill will establish a fee on virgin materials used for packaging at the rate of seven dollars per ton on packaging materials or seven-tenths of a cent per rigid container. This will encourage greater use of recycled materials and provide revenue that states and communities can use to develop and implement their programs.

My legislation avoids the "heavy hand of Washington" approach. Sure, we'll set tough goals for everyone. But we also will give the states what they never had before—the tools and resources to reach these goals.

And we give states—in fact, we encourage states—to experiment with new options. To tap the creative strength of the Union.

This is ambitious legislation. But our challenge is formidable. We are all now witnessing new serious environmental problems like global warming which may be contributing to a national drought and higher crop prices, a garbage crisis that may bury us all, and the poorest air quality in years.

My legislation will help America put its new found awareness of the environment to work. Now. And it will pick up the torch of the environmental effort started in the 1960's.

It adds yet another chapter to America's environmental story. I expect resistance from those who will face inconvenience or costs associated with this initiative. But there has been resistance before.

Clearly, those who bear the responsibility for the ultimate resolution—elected officials and producers of products—will resist because my solution will cost money.

This has been the case in past environmental battles. It will be the case here.

The marginal cost of compliance by each company or community, industry or association will be marginally greater than the perceived value to protection of public health, and the environment. This has been argued against every environmental initiative for a quarter of a century and there is no reason to believe it will change here.

Equally difficult will be dealing with those who want no solution. Those who believe that no incineration is an acceptable alternative; that no landfilling is an acceptable alternative; that all waste must be either internalized or recaptured.

I find that approach politically appealing and a formula for doing nothing. As a politician, I can't have the best of both of those worlds. As a pragmatist, I want to see results. Advocates of extreme positions will find I have little time for oversimplification.

My bill won't achieve the level of recycling that some in the environmental community would desire in the near term. But it will go a long way toward better utilizing our resources.

We are so far from a minimally acceptable level of recapture, recovery and reuse of resources which are currently dumped, buried or burned, that any progress in this area should be saluted.

I will entertain any proposal which represents progress. I will consider any alternative which recognizes that it took us more than 50 years to create this mess and will probably take more than 5 to extricate ourselves.

The time has come for America to take the lead, not just to preserve the ozone layer or stop the destruction of our oceans. The time has come for America to dispose of the throw away society. To make recycling a habit, not a hope. To provide incentives to reduction of disposal of reuseable materials and to penalize those commodities and products which by their nature cannot be recycled, re-used or born again.

No country has the technology to do the job as do we. No country has the environmental movement which will insist that we do the job as do we. And no country has the incentive to find exportable ideas and technologies to do the job effectively, as do we.

I look forward to working with you on this issue in the days and months ahead. And I again thank you for listening to my views this morning.●

By Mr. D'AMATO (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. DOLE, Mr. GARN, Mr. GLENN, Mr. HATCH, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. STENNIS, and Mr. STEVENS):

S.J. Res. 376. Joint resolution designating September 13, 1989, as "Uncle Sam Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

UNCLE SAM DAY

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a joint resolution, sponsored and introduced in the other body by the distinguished leader of the New York delegation, the Honorable SAM STRATTON, who is retiring at the end of this Congress. This resolution designates September 13, 1989, as "Uncle Sam Day" to honor Samuel Wilson, of Troy, NY, the progenitor of the symbol "Uncle Sam"—perhaps a tribute from one all-American Sam to another.

All of us know Uncle Sam from the famous Army recruiting poster "I want you for the U.S. Army." Few, however, know the legend of his origin. The person behind this symbol of our country was one Samuel Wilson, affectionately known to the Troy community as "Uncle Sam." During the war of 1812, Wilson, a prominent meatpacker, was involved in supplying meat to the U.S. Army. At this time, "USA" was the only known abbreviated form of the United States. So when the initials "US" appeared on meat containers, Wilson's employees jokingly interpreted US to mean "Uncle Sam." The idea of Uncle Sam as a personification of the U.S. Government spread and the legend of Uncle Sam, a national symbol, was born.

Over the years, "Uncle Sam" has represented many images. He is generally thought of as representing the U.S. Government itself. While first thought "kindly but firm," his image toughened when an artist portrayed him as the stern World War I Army recruiter. His stars and stripes and red, white, and blue clothing symbolize his patriotism.

Mr. President, as a New York Senator, I am proud of Uncle Sam's New York origins. I also congratulate Troy, NY, on the occasion of its upcoming 200th anniversary in 1989. I urge my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this joint resolution.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 376

Whereas Samuel Wilson of the City of Troy, New York, is accepted as the progenitor of our national symbol, Uncle Sam;

Whereas Uncle Sam, the embodiment of Samuel Wilson, represents the enterprising, idealistic, and strong spirit that is the backbone of our Nation;

Whereas the symbol of Uncle Sam remains important to the identity of our Nation among freedom-loving people of the world;

Whereas the people of the City of Troy have dedicated themselves to the remembrance of Samuel Wilson and his role in American history;

Whereas the City of Troy marks its 200th anniversary in 1989; and

Whereas September 13 is the birth date of Samuel Wilson: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That September 13, 1989, is designated as "Uncle Sam Day" in honor of Samuel Wilson of the City of Troy, New York on the occasion of the 200th anniversary of the City. The President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

HOLLINGS AMENDMENT NO. 2945

Mr. HOLLINGS proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 1154, supra; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following: That this Act may be cited as the "Textile Apparel and Footwear Trade Act of 1988".

SEC. 2. POLICY.

The policy of this Act is to—

(1) relate the growth of textile and clothing imports to the growtn of the domestic market in order to prevent further disruption of the United States textiles and textile products markets, damage to United States textile and clothing manufacturers, and loss of job opportunities for United States textile and clothing workers; and

(2) maintain a viable United States nonrubber footwear industry by preventing further damage to United States nonrubber footwear manufacturers and loss of job opportunities for United States nonrubber footwear workers.

SEC. 3. FINDING AND DETERMINATIONS.

(A) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) with respect to textiles and textile products—

(A) the current level of imports of textiles and textile products from all sources, more than one hundred and sixty-five countries, reached nearly 12.7 billion square yard equivalents in 1986, an increase of 17 per centum over 1985 imports; this level of imports is 2.5 times the level of imports in 1980, a rate of increase that was not foreseen when the United States granted trade concessions benefiting foreign suppliers of textiles and textile products, and represents over 1.2 million job opportunities lost to United States workers;

(B) imported textiles and textile products contain four million bales of cotton which is equivalent to 39 per centum of annual cotton production in the United States; eight out of every ten bales of cotton contained in imported textiles and clothing are foreign grown cotton; sustained massive increases in imports of cotton textile and clothing products are causing a declining market share for domestic cotton producers, depressed prices, and an average annual market revenue loss of over $1,000,000,000; another result is that a market development program voluntarily funded by United States cotton producers actually benefits foreign growners; finally, as imports of textiles and clothing increase, domestic cotton acreage is shifted to produce other agricultural products which are already in oversupply thereby adding to the problems of United States agriculture;

(C) imports of textiles and textile products made of wool have doubled since 1980, creating major disruptions among domestic wool products producers and seriously depressing the price of United States produced raw wool; because import penetration in the domestic wool textile and clothing market is nearly 70 per centum, it is critical that action be taken to halt further erosion of the domestic industry's market share;

(D) imports of textiles and textile products made of manmade fiber and competing fibers, other than cotton or wool, have more than doubled since 1980 resulting in substantial reductions in domestic manmade fiber production capacity and job losses;

(E) the textile and clothing trade deficit of the United States exceeded $21,000,000,000 in 1986, an increase of 18 per centum over 1985, and accounted for 12 per centum of the Nation's overall merchandise trade deficit;

(F) import growth of clothing and clothing fabrics has averaged 8 per centum annually since 1973; over that same period, the domestic market for clothing and clothing fabrics has grown only 1 per centum annually; import growth has recently accelerated, and, since 1982, has average 21 per centum annually; the result is that import penetration in the domestic clothing and clothing fabric market has nearly doubled in the last six years, reaching a level of 52 per centum in 1986;

(G) as a result of this increased penetration and the very limited growth of the domestic market, the United States companies producing textiles and textile products competitive with those imported have been seriously damaged, many of them have been forced out of business, have closed plants or curtailed operations, workers in such companies have lost employment and have been otherwise materially and adversely affected, and serious hardship has been inflicted on hundreds of impacted communities causing a substantial reduction in economic activity and lost revenues to the Federal and local governments;

(H) the factors described above are causing serious damage, or the actual threat thereof, to domestic producers of textiles and textile products; as a result, market disruption exists in the United States requiring new measures;

(I) unless the import growth rate of textiles and textile products is slowed to the long-term rate of growth of the United States market, plant closings and job losses will continue to accelerate, leaving the United States with reduced competition benefiting domestic consumers and leaving the Nation in a less competitive international position;

(J) a strong, viable and efficient domestic textiles and textile products industry is essential in order to avoid impairment of the national security of the United States; and

(K) actions taken by the United States under the Arrangement Regarding International Trade in Textiles of December 20, 1973, as extended (commonly referred to as the "Multi-Fiber Arrangement" or "MFA") have failed to avoid disruptive effects in the textiles and textile products markets in the United States; and

(2) with respect to nonrubber footwear—

(A) nonrubber footwear imports in 1986 reached a record level of nine hundred and forty-one million pairs; this volume of imports is 2.5 times that of 1981, the year that import relief for the nonrubber footwear industry terminated, and is 11.6 per centum above 1985 levels, the year in which the International Trade Commission issued its third finding that the domestic nonrubber footwear industry has been seriously injured by increased imports;

(B) since 1981, import growth of nonrubber footwear has averaged more than 20 per centum per year, gaining market share at the expense of the domestic industry; in 1981, import penetration of the domestic nonrubber footwear market was 51 per centum; by 1986, import penetration reached an unprecedented 80.7 per centum;

(C) as a direct result of imports, domestic nonrubber footwear production has declined every year since 1978, reaching two hundred thirty-four million pairs in 1986, a production level matched only during the Great Depression in the 1930's;

(D) domestic nonrubber footwear employment has steadily declined every year since 1981, and is down 37 per centum from 1981 levels and 7.3 per centum from 1985 levels; unemployment in the nonrubber footwear industry averaged 15.4 per centum in 1986, more than double the national average; and

(E) domestic nonrubber footwear production facilities are closing at an alarming rate, with three hundred and eighty factory closings since 1981 and seventy closings in 1986 alone.

(b) Determinations.—Congress determines that, for the foregoing reasons—

(1) textiles and textile products are being imported into the United States in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to producers of textiles and textile products in the United States, and

(2) nonrubber footwear is being imported into the United States in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to producers of nonrubber footwear in the United States, within the meaning of article XIX of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

SEC. 4. LIMITS ON IMPORTS.

(a) Calendar Year 1987.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

(1) the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products, from all countries, classified under a category that is entered during calendar year 1987 shall not exceed on amount equal to 101 per centum of the aggregate quantity of such products classified under such category, from all countries, that entered during calendar year 1986, and

(2) the aggregate quantity of nonrubber footwear, from all countries, classified under a nonrubber footwear category that is entered during calendar year 1987, and during each calendar year thereafter, shall not exceed an amount equal to—

(A) the aggregate quantity of nonrubber footwear classified under such category, from all countries, that entered during calendar year 1986, and

(B) in the case of low priced nonrubber footwear, notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the aggregate quantity of low priced nonrubber footwear classified under such category, from all countries, that entered during calendar year 1986.

(b) Growth Adjustment.—For calendar years after 1987, the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products, from all countries, classified under each category that may be entered during each such calendar year shall be increased by an amount equal to 1 per centum of the aggregate quantity that could be entered under such category during the preceding calendar year. If the aggregate quantity that could be entered under a category for a calendar year after 1987 is reduced under section 10(b), then, in the first calendar year in which there is no such reduction, this subsection shall be applied as if there had been no reduction under section 10(b) in previous calendar years.

(c) Exceptions.—

(1) The limitations in this Act on the aggregate quantity of articles of textiles and textile products and nonrubber footwear that may be entered during any calendar year do not apply to articles of that kind that are the product of any insular possession of the United States if the articles are—

(A) exempt from duty under general headnote 3(a) of the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202); and

(B) manufactured or produced in such possession by individuals who are either—

(i) United States citizens;

(ii) United States nationals; or

(iii) permanent residents of such possession in accordance with its laws.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the aggregate quantity of sweaters that are—

(A) made of cotton, wool, or manmade fibers; and

(B) assembled in Guam from otherwise completed knit-to-shape component parts; and that may be entered—

(i) during calendar year 1987, may not exceed 163,216 dozen; and

(ii) during any calendar year after 1987, may not exceed the aggregate quantity that is authorized to be entered under this paragraph during the preceding calendar year, increased by 1 per centum.

(d) Enforcement.—The Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate for the efficient and fair administration of the provisions of this Act, including regulations governing entry, or withdrawal from warehouse, for consumption of the products covered by this Act. Such regulations shall provide for reasonable spacing of imports over the calendar year.

(e) Allocations for Certain Countries.—Regulations may be prescribed under subsection (d) only if such regulations ensure that—

(1) an amount of the limitation imposed by this section on the aggregate quantity of textiles and textile products classified under each category entered during calendar year 1989 and during each succeeding calendar year (hereafter in this subsection referred to as the "applicable year") is allocated to such products of each country to which the total quantity of United States agricultural products exported on commercial terms during the calendar year preceding the applicable year exceeds the total quantity of United States agricultural products exported on commercial terms to such country during the calendar year before the calendar year preceding the applicable year; and

(2) the amount of textiles and textile products classified under each category entered during the applicable year that is allocated so each country under paragraph (1) exceeds the quantity of such products of such country classified under such category that entered during the calendar year preceding the applicable year.

SEC. 5. TARIFF COMPENSATION.

(a) Compensation.—

(1) The President may (A) enter into trade agreements with foreign countries or instrumentalities to grant new concessions as compensation, to the extent required under international trade agreements of the United States, for the import limits imposed under section 4 of this Act to maintain the general level of reciprocal and mutually advantageous concessions under such agreements; and (B) proclaim such modification or continuance of any existing duty on textiles and textile products and on nonrubber footwear as he determines to be required or appropriate to carry out such agreements.

(2) No proclamation shall be made under paragraph (1) decreasing any rate of duty to a rate of duty which is less than 90 per centum of the existing rate of duty.

(3) Before entering into any trade agreement under this subsection with any foreign country or instrumentality, the President shall consider whether such country or instrumentality has violated trade concessions of benefit to the United States and such violation has not been adequately offset by the action of the United States or by such country or instrumentality.

(b) Staging Requirements.—The aggregate reduction in the rate of duty on any article which is in effect on any day pursuant to subsection (a) shall not exceed the aggregate reduction which would have been in effect on such day if a reduction of one-fifth of the total reduction under subsection (a) had taken effect on the effective date of the first reduction proclaimed to carry out such trade agreement, and at one-year intervals after such effective date.

(c) Prohibition.—Except as provided in subsection (a) and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President may not enter into trade negotiations with any foreign country or instrumentality with respect to duties on textiles and textile products and on nonrubber footwear and may not decrease, or propose a decrease, in any such duty by any means, including an implementing bill under section 151 of the Trade Act of 1974 or a proclamation.

SEC. 6. ANNUAL REPORT.

Not later than March 15, 1989, and March 15 of each calendar year thereafter, the President shall submit to the Congress a report on the administration of this Act during the preceding calendar year. Such report shall include detailed information about the implementation and operation of the limitations established under section 4. All departments and agencies shall cooperate in preparation of this report, as requested by the President.

Within six months after the commencement of the study, the Secretary shall submit to Congress his findings.

SEC. 8. AUCTION OF IMPORT LICENSES.

(a) Import Licenses.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish and implement a pilot program for the issuance and sale to United States companies at public auction of import licenses applicable to categories of textiles and categories of textile products.

(b) Identification of Categories Subject to Licenses.—The categories of textiles, and the categories of textile products, to which the import licensing program under this section applies shall be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce. Such selection shall be made so that—

(1) the number of categories of textiles so selected shall, in the aggregate, account for the volume of imports equal to no less than 20 per centum of the value of textiles entered; and

(2) the total number of categories of textile products so selected shall, in the aggregate, account for the volume of imports equal to no less than 20 per centum of the value of textile products entered.

(c) Auctioning of Import Licenses.—

(1) Each import license to be issued and sold pursuant to this section shall be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury at a public auction held no earlier than fifteen days after the date on which notice of such auction is published in the Federal Register.

(2) By no later than the date that is sixty days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe regulations under which auctions shall be conducted under paragraph (1). Such regulations shall provide for—

(a) the auctioning of quotas, on a historical basis, among retailers, importers, and manufacturers of textiles and apparel;

(b) the transfer of auctioned imported licenses among importers; and

(c) a means of ensuring that no person obtains undue market power in the markets of the United States through the use of auctioned import licenses.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe, on an expedited basis, such regulations supplementing the regulations prescribed under paragraph (2) as are necessary to address factors involved in conducting the sale by auction of import licenses for any article that are unique to such article.

(d) Deposit of Revenues.—Any revenues from the sale of import licenses under this section shall be paid into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

(e) Duration.—The import licensing program under this section shall begin on January 1, 1989, and end at the close of December 31, 1989.

(f) Report.—Not later than March 31, 1990, the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, shall report to Congress on the administration of the import licensing program under this section and the advantages and disadvantages of auctioning import licenses demonstrated by the program.

CLEAN AIR STANDARDS ATTAINMENT ACT

WIRTH (AND ARMSTRONG) AMENDMENT NO. 2948

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. WIRTH (for himself and Mr. ARMSTRONG) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 1894) to amend the Clean Air Act to establish new requirements for areas that have not yet attained health-protective ambient air quality standards, to provide new deadlines for such attainment, to delay the imposition of sanctions, to better protect against interstate transport of pollutants, to control existing and new sources of acid deposition, and for other purposes; as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

SEC. . YEAR-ROUND DAYLIGHT SAVINGS TIME.

Section 3 of the Uniform Time Act of 1966 (15 U.S.C. 260a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

(d)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other law, a State in the Pacific or Mountain time zone may, by law, in lieu of the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, provide for year-round daylight savings for that State by advancing the standard time or times in such State by one hour. When time is advanced pursuant to this subsection, that time or times, as so advanced, shall be, except to the extent otherwise provided in paragraph (2), the standard time or times for the State.

(2) Any State may, by law, provide for year-round daylight savings time for only a portion of the State if that State desires to match the standard time of that portion of the State with a bordering State which has, by law, provided for year-round daylight savings time pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) Any time advanced pursuant to this subsection shall remain in effect during the period provided by State law. Upon the expiration or repeal of any such State law advancing the standard time or times in a State pursuant to this subsection, the standard time or times in such State, on and after such termination or repeal, shall be in accordance with the provisions of this Act and other applicable laws, other than this subsection.

(4) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this subsection, no State shall advance the standard time in such State pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection unless—

(A) the State contains at least one nonattainment area for the national primary ambient air quality standard for carbon monoxide;

(B) the State has determined that attainment of the national primary ambient air quality standard for carbon monoxide is not likely despite the implementation of requirements of the Clean Air Act of 1977;

(C) the State has determined that year-round daylight savings time is a necessary part of its efforts to attain the national primary ambient air quality standard for carbon monoxide;

(D) the State has included in its implementation plan a provision setting forth its intention to adopt year-round daylight savings time; and

(E) the State has included with the implementation plan information to demonstrate that adoption of year-round daylight savings time may reduce carbon monoxide levels in a nonattainment area in such State.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I was an original cosponsor of legislation introduced by Senator MITCHELL and many other Members of the Senate to clean up the air in urban areas across the country. That legislation, which was approved by the Environment and Public Works Committee and which is now part of S. 1894, would extend the deadline for cities to meet the national health standard for carbon monoxide and ozone. But the bill also requires these cities—from New York City to Denver to Los Angeles—to adopt tough new measures to reduce air pollution.

I strongly support this legislation and if the Congress enacts this legislation into law, we will see a steady improvement in air quality in the Nation's cities. But high-altitude cities across the Western States face special problems in their efforts to reduce air pollution.

We are making progress. Last year, Colorado became the first State in the country to require the use of oxygenated fuels during the winter. That reduced carbon monoxide pollution by nearly 10 percent. Next year's program will be even more effective since the oxygen content of fuels will increase.

And Colorado has been a national leader in encouraging people to drive less, especially on high pollution days. Our "Better Air Campaign" also cut carbon monoxide pollution by 10 percent.

But we can and must do more. Today, I am pleased to join the senior Senator from Colorado, Senator ARMSTRONG, in introducing an amendment to S. 1894 that will give States like ours another tool they can use to clean the air.

Our amendment, Mr. President, would give States like Colorado the option of switching to year-round daylight savings time if they can show that such a change would help reduce air pollution.

The problem in States like Colorado is that winter temperature inversions trap auto emissions near the ground. These winter air inversions occur frequently in the evening. As a result, cities like Denver typically experience this highest carbon monoxide levels on winter evenings. However, if Colorado were to stay on daylight savings time year round, evening rush hour would occur at warmer daylight hours, when pollution is more likely to disperse.

The Colorado Department of Health has carefully studied this proposal. They have concluded that shifting Colorado to year-round daylight savings time would reduce carbon monoxide air pollution by 9 percent. That represents a significant reduction, and it would be virtually cost free. There are very few, if any, other pollution reduction strategies that can make that claim.

Our amendment would streamline the process for States that want to shift to daylight savings time. It would not relieve the States from adopting other measures that they must take to reduce air pollution. And it would require the States to make a showing that such a change would reduce air pollution. But if the States can make that showing, this amendment would remove the procedural obstacles to getting that done.

Mr. President, S. 1894 is a good bill. It will protect the health of millions of Americans who live in cities across the country and who are exposed every day to dirty air. The amendment Senator ARMSTRONG and I are introducing strengthens the bill by giving Western States an additional tool to fight air pollution. I urge all Senators to join us in support of this amendment, and S. 1894.●

"(ii) the original transferee transfers all (or any portion of) the transferred property referred to in paragraph (1) to a person who is not a member of the original transferor's family, the original transferor shall be treated as having made a transfer by gift of property to the original transferee equal to the paragraph (1) inclusion (or proportionate amount thereof). Proper adjustments shall be made in the amount treated as a gift by reason of the preceding sentence to take into account prior transfers to which this subparagraph applied.

The amount determined under the preceding sentence shall be reduced by the amount (if any) of the taxable gift resulting from the transfer referred to in paragraph (1)(B).

"(II) each employer (other than a subordinate unit of a national-railway-labor-organization employer) shall be liable for that portion of the contribution with respect to such compensation paid by all such employers which the compensation paid by him to such employee bears to the total compensation paid in such month by all such employers to such employee.

In the event that the compensation paid by such employers to the employee in such month is less than such monthly compensation base, each subordinate unit of a national-railway-labor-organization employer shall be liable for such portion of any additional contribution as the compensation paid by such employer to such employee in such month bears to the total compensation paid by all such employers to such employee in such month.

"(iv) MEANING OF SYMBOLS.—For purposes of the formulas in clauses (ii) and (iii)—

"(I) 'R' is the applicable contribution rate expressed as a percentage for months in the calendar year;

"(II) 'A' is the contribution rate determined under clause (i);

"(IV) 'C' is the percentage rate for the employer, as determined under subparagraph (C), for calendar year 1992.

"(C) EXPERIENCE-RATED CONTRIBUTIONS.—With respect to compensation paid in a calendar year that begins after December 31, 1992, the contribution rate for each employer shall be determined as follows:

"(i) STEP 1.—Compute the employer's benefit ratio as of the preceding June 30 to 4 decimal points in accordance with paragraph (2).

"(ii) STEP 2.—Subtract the employer's reserve ratio as of the preceding June 30 as computed to 4 decimal points in accordance with paragraph (4).

"(iii) STEP 3.—Subtract the pooled credit ratio for the calendar year, if any, as computed to 4 decimal points in accordance with paragraph (12).

"(iv) STEP 4.—Multiply by 100 the total arrived at under the steps set forth in clauses (i) through (iii) so as to obtain a percentage rate, which shall be rounded to the nearest 100th of 1 percent. If the total arrived at under such steps is 0 or less than 0, the percentage rate as so computed shall be 0.

"(v) STEP 5.—Add 0.65 to the percentage rate arrived at under clause (iv), representing the portion of the employer's contribution which is to be deposited to the credit of the fund under subsection (i).

"(viii) STEP 8.—Reduce the percentage rate computed in accordance with the preceding steps to the maximum contribution limit computed under paragraph (20), if such rate is higher than such limit. The rate computed in accordance with the preceding steps, after any reduction under this clause, is the contribution rate.

"(D) NEW-EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTION RATES.—Notwithstanding subparagraphs (B) and (C), the contribution rate applicable to a new employer who does not become subject to this Act until after December 31, 1989, shall be determined as follows:

"(i) 1ST CALENDAR YEAR.—With respect to compensation paid in calendar months before the end of the first full calendar year in which the employer is subject to this Act, the contribution rate shall be the average contribution rate paid by all employers during the 3 calendar years preceding the calendar year before the calendar year in which the compensation is paid. The average contribution rate shall be determined—

"(I) by dividing the aggregate contributions paid by all employers under this subsection in those 3 calendar years by the aggregate compensation with respect to which such contributions were paid; and

"(II) by multiplying the resulting ratio as computed to 4 decimal points by 100.

"(ii) 2D CALENDAR YEAR.—With respect to compensation paid in calendar months in the next calendar year, the contribution rate shall be the smaller of—

"(I) the maximum contribution limit computed under paragraph (20); or

"(II) the percentage rate computed pursuant to the following formula:

$$R=\frac{2(A2)+B}{3}$$

"(iii) 3D CALENDAR YEAR.—With respect to compensation paid in calendar months in the third full calendar year in which the employer is subject to the coverage of this Act, the contribution rate shall be the smaller of—

"(III) 'A2' is the contribution rate which would have been determined under clause (i) if the employer's second calendar year had been its first full calendar year;

"(V) 'B' is the contribution rate for the employer as determined under subparagraph (C) for the employer's second full calendar year; and

"(VI) 'C' is the contribution rate for the employer as determined under subparagraph (C) for the employer's third full calendar year.

"(vi) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN COMPUTATIONS.—For purposes of computing B and C in such formulas—

"(I) the percentage rate computed under subparagraph (C), shall not be reduced under clause (viii) of that subparagraph; and

"(II) any computations which under subparagraph (C) are to be made on the basis of a 4-quarter or 12-quarter period ending on a given June 30 shall be made on the basis of a period commencing with the first day of the first calendar quarter that begins after the date on which the employer first commenced paying compensation subject to this Act and ending on that June 30, and the amount so computed shall be increased to an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount so computed as 4 or 12, as appropriate, bears to the number of calendar quarters in the period on which the computation was based.

"(2) BENEFIT RATIO.—An employer's benefit ratio as of any given June 30 shall be determined by dividing all benefits charged to the employer under paragraph (15) during the 12 calendar quarters ending on such June 30 by the employer's 3-year compensation base as of such June 30 as computed under paragraph (3).

"(3) 3-YEAR COMPENSATION BASE.—An employer's 3-year compensation base as of any given June 30 is the aggregate compensation with respect to which contributions were paid by the employer under this subsection in the 12 calendar quarters ending on such June 30.

The employer's reserve ratio may be either a positive or a negative figure, depending upon whether the employer's reserve balance is a positive or negative figure.

"(5) 1-Year Compensation Base.—An employer's 1-year compensation base as of any given June 30 is the aggregate compensation with respect to which contributions were paid by the employer under this subsection in the 4 calendar quarters ending on such June 30.

An employer's reserve balance may be either positive or negative, depending upon whether or not that employer's net cumulative contribution balance exceeds the employer's cumulative benefit balance.

"(7) Cumulative Benefit Balance.—An employer's cumulative benefit balance as of any given June 30 shall be determined by adding—

"(A) the net amount of the benefits charged to the employer under paragraph (15) on or after January 1, 1990; and

"(B) the cumulative amount of the employer's unallocated charges for the same period, if any, as computed under paragraph (9).

"(8) Net Cumulative Contribution Balance.—An employer's net cumulative contribution balance as of any given June 30 shall be determined as follows:

"(A) Step 1.—Compute the sum of

"(i) all contributions paid by the employer pursuant to this subsection;

"(ii) that portion of the tax imposed under section 3321(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 that is attributable to the surtax rate under section 516(b) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance and Retirement Improvement Act of 1988; and on or after January 1, 1990.

"(B) Step 2.—Subtract an amount equal to the amount of such contributions deposited to the credit of the fund under subsection (i).

"(C) Step 3.—Add an amount equal to the aggregate amount by which such contributions were reduced in prior calendar years as a result of pooled credits, if any, under paragraph (1)(C)(iii).

"(9) Unallocated Charge.—An employer's unallocated charge as of any given June 30 is the amount that as of such June 30 bears the same ratio to the system unallocated charge balance, computed under paragraph (10), as the employer's 1-year compensation base, computed under paragraph (5), bears to the system compensation base computed under paragraph (11).

"(10) System Unallocated Charge Balance.—The system unallocated charge balance as of any given June 30 shall be determined as follows:

"(A) Step 1.—Compute the aggregate amount of all interest paid by the account on loans from the Railroad Retirement Account after September 30, 1985, pursuant to section 10(d), during the 4 calendar quarters ending on that June 30.

"(B) Step 2.—Add the aggregate amount of any additions to the system unallocated charge balance specified in paragraphs (15) and (16), during that period.

"(E) Step 5.—Subtract the aggregate amount of all transfers to the account, pursuant to section 11(d), during that period.

"(F) Step 6.—Subtract the aggregate amount of all other income and receipts of the account, during that period, which are not assigned to individual employer balances.

"(11) System Compensation Base.—The system compensation base as of any given June 30 shall be determined by adding together the amounts of the 1-year compensation bases of all employers and employee representatives subject to this Act, computed in accordance with paragraph (5), as of such June 30.

"(12) Pooled Credit Ratio.—The pooled credit ratio, if any, for a calendar year shall be determined as follows:

"(A) Step 1.—Compute the balance to the credit of the account as of the close of business on the preceding June 30, including any amounts in the account attributable to loans made under section 10(d) before October 1, 1985, but disregarding the obligation to repay such loans and interest thereon. In determining such balance as of June 30 of any year, so much of the balance to the credit of the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund as of the close of business on such date as is in excess of $6,000,000 shall be deemed to be part of the balance to the credit of such account. There will be a pooled credit ratio for the calendar year only if that balance is in excess of the greater of $250,000,000 or of the amount that bears the same ratio to $250,000,000 as the system compensation base as of that June 30 bears to the system compensation base as of June 30, 1991, as computed in accordance with paragraph (11).

"(B) Step 2.—If there is such an excess amount, divide that excess amount by the system compensation base as of the June 30 preceding the calendar year. The result is the pooled credit ratio for the calendar year.

"(13) Pooled Charge Ratio.—The pooled charge ratio, if any, for a calendar year shall be determined as follows:

"(A) Step 1.—With respect to each employer whose contribution rate for that calendar year as computed through step 6 under paragraph (1)(C) was greater than the maximum contribution limit computed under paragraph (20), multiply the employer's 1-year compensation base as of the preceding June 30, as computed in accordance with paragraph (5), by the difference between—

"(i) the percentage rate determined under subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of paragraph (1) before the reduction to the maximum contribution limit; and

"(ii) the maximum contribution limit.

"(B) Step 2.—Add the amounts arrived at under step 1 so as to obtain an aggregate amount for all such employers.

"(C) Step 3.—For each employer whose contribution rate as computed through step 3 under paragraph (1)(C) was less than 0, the percentage rate by which such employer's rate was raised in order to bring that rate to 0 shall be multiplied by that employer's 1-year compensation base as of the preceding June 30. Subtract the total of the amounts computed under the preceding sentence for all employers from the amount arrived at in step 2.

"(D) Step 4.—Divide the aggregate amount arrived at under step 3 by the system compensation base as of the preceding June 30 as computed under paragraph (11) minus the one-year compensation base of those employers whose rates computed through step 6 of paragraph (1)(C) exceeded the maximum contribution rate computed under paragraph (20). The result is the pooled charge ratio for the calendar year.

"(14) Surcharge Rate.—The surcharge rate for a calendar year, if any, shall be determined as follows:

"(A) Step 1.—Compute the balance to the credit of the account as of the close of business on the preceding June 30, including any amounts in the account attributable to loans made under section 10(d) before October 1, 1985, but disregarding the obligation to repay such loans and interest thereon. In determining such balance as of June 30 of any year, so much of the balance to the credit of the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund as of the close of business on such date as is in excess of $6,000,000 shall be deemed to be part of the balance to the credit of such account. There will be a surcharge rate for the calendar year only if that balance is less than the greater of $100,000,000 or of the amount that bears the same ratio to $100,000,000 as the system compensation base as of that June 30 bears to the system compensation base as of June 30, 1991, as computed in accordance with paragraph (11).

"(B) Step 2.—(i) If the balance to the credit of the account is less than the greater of the amounts referred to in the 2nd sentence of step 1 but is equal to or more than the greater of $50,000,000 or of the amount that bears the same ratio to $50,000,000 as the system compensation base as of that June 30 bears to the system compensation base as of June 30, 1991, then the surcharge rate for the calendar year shall be 1.5 percent.

"(ii) If the balance to the credit of the account is less than the greater of the amounts referred to in the clause (i), but greater than or equal to zero, then the surcharge rate for the calendar year shall be 2.5 percent.

"(iii) If the balance to the credit of the account is less than zero, the surcharge rate for the calendar year shall be 3.5 percent.

"(15) Chargeable Benefits.—

"(A) In General.—Beginning January 1, 1990, all benefits paid to an employee for days of unemployment or days of sickness shall be charged to that employee's base year employer by adding amounts equal to the amounts of such benefits to the employer's cumulative benefit balance except that benefits paid by reason of strikes or work stoppages growing out of labor disputes shall not be added to the employer's cumulative benefit balance but instead shall be added to the system unallocated charge balance.

"(B) Adjustments.—A sum equal to each amount realized in recovery for overpayment, erroneous payment, or reimbursement of benefits and credited to the account pursuant to section 10(a)(v) or 10(a)(viii) shall be subtracted from the cumulative benefit balances of the employers of the employees to whom such an amount was paid as a benefit in the proportion to the amount by which each such employer's cumulative benefit balance was increased as a result of the payment of the benefit.

"(C) MULTIPLE EMPLOYERS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—All benefits paid to an employee who had more than 1 base-year employer shall be charged to the cumulative benefit balances of the employee's base year employers—

"(I) in reverse chronological order of the employee's employment with each such employer in the base year if the employer at the time of the claim was the last base year employer, and the amount charged to each employer shall not exceed the compensation paid by that employer to the employee in the base year; and

"(II) in all other cases, in the same ratio as the compensation paid to such employee by the employer bears to the total of such compensation paid to such employee by all such employers in the base year.

"(ii) SPECIAL RULE FOR EMPLOYER WITH CANCELLED BALANCES.—All benefits chargeable under this subparagraph to an employer for which the Board has cancelled balances under paragraph (16) shall be added to the system unallocated charge balance.

"(16) DEFUNCT EMPLOYER.—Whenever the Board determines, pursuant to such regulations as the Board may prescribe, that an employer has permanently ceased to pay compensation with respect to which contributions are payable pursuant to this subsection, the Board shall, effective on the date of the Board's determination, transfer the employer's net cumulative contribution balance as a subtraction from, and cumulative benefit balance as an addition to, the system unallocated charge balance and cancel all other accumulations of the employer.

"(17) INDIVIDUAL EMPLOYER RECORD.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—As of January 1, 1990, the Board shall commence maintaining an individual employer record with respect to each employer, and the records necessary to determine pooled charges, pooled credits and unallocated charge balances for the system. Whenever a new employer begins paying compensation with respect to which contributions are payable pursuant to this subsection, the Board shall establish and maintain an individual employer record for such employer.

"(B) DEFINITION.—As used in this paragraph, the term 'individual employer record' means a record of an individual employer's benefit ratio, reserve ratio, 1-year compensation base, 3-year compensation base, unallocated charge, reserve balance, net cumulative contribution balance, and cumulative benefit balance.

"(18) JOINT EMPLOYER RECORDS.—Pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Board, the Board may allow 2 or more employers, upon application, to establish and maintain, or to discontinue, a joint individual employer record for such employers as though such joint record constituted a single employer's individual employer record.

"(19) MERGERS, CONSOLIDATIONS, OR OTHER CHANGES IN EMPLOYER IDENTITY.—

"(A) WITH OTHER EMPLOYERS.—In the event of a merger, consolidation, unification, or reorganization in which an employer combines with another employer and the combination entails no partitioning of the property of the employer, the individual employer records of the 2 employers shall be combined into a joint individual employer record if the parties request such joint treatment pursuant to paragraph (18) or if the Board otherwise determines, pursuant to regulations prescribed by the Board, that such joint treatment is desirable.

"(B) WITH NONEMPLOYERS.—In the event of a merger, consolidation, unification, or reorganization in which an employer combines with another entity that is not an employer, the employer's individual employer record shall attach to the combined entity.

"(C) SALE OF ASSETS.—In the event property of an employer is sold or transferred to another employer or other entity, or is partitioned among 2 or more employers or entities, the cumulative benefit balance, net cumulative contribution balance, 1-year compensation base, and 3-year compensation base of the employer shall be prorated among the employers which receive the property, including any entities which become employers by virtue of such transfer or partition, in such equitable manner as the Board by regulation shall prescribe.

"(D) REINCORPORATION.—The cumulative benefit balance, net cumulative contribution balance, 1-year compensation base, and 3-year compensation base of an employer that reincorporates or otherwise alters its corporate identity in a transaction not involving a merger, consolidation, or unification shall attach to the reincorporated or altered entity.

"(E) ABANDONMENT.—If an employer abandons property or discontinues service but continues to operate as an employer, the employer's individual employer record shall continue to be calculated as provided in this subsection without retroactive adjustment.

"(20) MAXIMUM CONTRIBUTION LIMIT.—The maximum contribution limit with respect to a calendar year is 12 percent, unless a 3.5 percent surcharge under paragraph (14) is in effect with respect to that calendar year. If such a surcharge is in effect the maximum contribution limit with respect to that calendar year is 12.5 percent.

"(21) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN COMPUTATIONS UNDER PARAGRAPH (1)(C).—(A) Any computation that is to be made under paragraph (1)(C) on the basis of a 12-quarter period ending on a given June 30 shall be made on the basis of a period—

"(I) January 1, 1990;

"(II) the first day of the first calendar quarter that begins after the date on which the employer first began to pay compensation subject to this Act; or

"(III) July 1 of the third calendar year preceding that June 30; and

"(ii) ending on that June 30.

"(B) The amount computed under subparagraph (A) shall be increased to an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount so computed as 12 bears to the number of calendar quarters on which the computation is based.".

(b) EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVE CONTRIBUTION.—Subsection (b) of section 8 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVE CONTRIBUTION.—Each employee representative shall pay a contribution with respect to so much of the compensation paid to him for services performed as an employee representative as is not in excess of the monthly compensation base computed in accordance with section 1(i), at a rate which shall be determined under subsection (a) in the same manner and with the same effect as if the employee organization by which such employee representative is employed were an employer as defined in this Act.".

(c) EXTENSION OF REMEDIES.—Section 8(h) is amended by adding at the end the following: "The remedies available under the first sentence of this subsection for an employer or employee representative who contests the amount of contributions payable by him shall also apply with respect to a contention that the contribution rate determined by the Board under subsection (a) or (b) to be applicable to such employer or employee representative is inaccurate or otherwise improper.".

(d) BOARD PROCLAMATION OF BALANCE.—Section 8 is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (c) through (h) as subsections (f) through (k), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsections:

"(c) BOARD PROCLAMATION OF BALANCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than October 15, 1990, and October 15 of each year thereafter the Board shall proclaim—

"(A) the balance to the credit of the account as of the preceding June 30 for purposes of paragraphs (12) and (14) of subsection (a);

"(B) the balance of any advances to the account under section 10(d) after September 30, 1985, that has not been repaid with interest as provided in such section as of September 30 of that year;

"(d) NOTIFICATIONS BY BOARD.—(1) Not later than the last day of any calendar quarter that begins after March 31, 1990, the Board shall notify each employer and employee representative of its net cumulative contribution balance and cumulative benefit balance as of the end of the preceding calendar quarter, as computed in accordance with paragraphs (7) and (8) of subsection (a) as of the last day of such preceding calendar quarter rather than as of a given June 30 if such last day is not a June 30.

"(2) Not later than October 15, 1990, and October 15 of each year thereafter, the Board shall notify each employer and employee representative of its benefit ratio, reserve ratio, 1-year compensation base, 3-year compensation base, unallocated charge, and reserve balance as of the preceding June 30 as computed in accordance with paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), and (9) of subsection (a), and of the contribution rate applicable to the employer or employee representative in the following calendar year as computed under paragraphs (1) (B), (C), or (D) of that subsection.

"(e) INFORMATION TO VERIFY ACCURACY TO BE MADE AVAILABLE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, upon request by an employer or employee representative, the Board shall make available to such employer or employee representative any information available to the Board which may be necessary to verify the accuracy of a contribution rate determined by the Board to be applicable to such employer or employee representative, or of any component of that contribution rate including the accuracy of the employer's individual employer record, upon payment by such employer or employee representative to the Board of the cost incurred by the Board in making such infor-

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

JACK COCHRAN

Jack Cochran has served the North Arkansas Electric Cooperative as its general manager for 38 years. The "dean" of cooperative managers in Arkansas, Jack has left his mark on a system that has literally brought thousands of Arkansans out of the darkness and into the light.

No one has captured the contribution that Jack Cochran has made to our State better than Carl Whillock, president of the Arkansas Electric Cooperatives, Inc. I would like to share with my colleagues his tribute to Jack Cochran and to join Jack's many friends and colleagues throughout the State in wishing him a long and relaxing retirement.

ARKANSAS' "DEAN OF COOPERATIVE MANAGERS"

(By Carl S. Whillock, President AECI–AECC)

One of the major news stories coming from the electric cooperatives this year will be the retirement of Jack Cochran as manager of North Arkansas Electric Cooperative. Simply saying he has made a significant contribution to the rural electric program would be a gross understatement.

Arkansas has had a number of managers who have made significant contributions to the rural electric program. There isn't space here to name them all. Jack Cochran, however, is the "Dean of Cooperative Managers" in our state. He has earned this distinction through 38 years as general manager of North Arkansas. This service is longer than anyone else in such a position in Arkansas.

As with any program that endures the test of time there comes a point when the early pioneers begin to turn the reins over to the second generation. In the electric cooperative movement that process is nearing an end. Jack Cochran wasn't a part of North Arkansas' incorporation, but he became a part of the system in 1942, two years after the first lines were energized.

For 46 years he has been an employee of the electric cooperative. His work on the local, state and national level has been tremendous.

He will be leaving his mark. Four individuals who have trained under him have been selected as cooperative managers. Every person in this group has superior talents. This demonstrates Jack's ability to recognize capable people and encourage their development.

Describing Jack Cochran can be summed up in one word—"innovator." He was one of the first, if not the first, in the nation to promote power use. He started slow, giving away light bulbs at numerous community meetings held in cooperative territory. Soon North Arkansas was selling small appliances and later larger ones. It developed a finance program so consumers could pay for their purchases over a period of time.

Another method of building the load was organizing dairy farms. Starting from scratch without a single Grade A dairy in its territory, North Arkansas soon had 16 dairies on its lines.

Without a paved road in the cooperative area, Jack began looking for industrial development to help the cooperative grow. This was another first. The long term plan was to develop water and sewer facilities, locate buildings or help finance the buildings of plant facilities and even promoting the development of hospitals to make the area more attractive. Looking across the area served by North Arkansas Electric Cooperative today, at the quality of life enjoyed by the members, at the opportunities being created, we can readily see that his leadership was successful.

Fortunately for all of us he didn't confine his work to just his home cooperative. While he was leading North Arkansas Cooperative he was also lending his assistance to the statewide association. He was president in 1956 and was a member of the incorporating board for Arkansas Electric Cooperative Corporation. When the extremely vital territorial integrity law was being proposed, drafted and passed, he played an active role.

Later he served on the board of directors of National Rural Electric Cooperative Association and helped develop the program to the point today that it is recognized as one of the most effective lobbyist groups in Washington.

Looking back it would be difficult to judge where we would be if it had not been for a person like Jack Cochran. All to often we take their leadership for granted. Quite true they are seldom alone in what they do. There are always others sharing the commitment and dedication. Whenever we look back, however, there is always one who seems to grasp the situation first and sets about doing the necessary job.

Perhaps the real legacy of Jack Cochran will be that when it came time for him to step aside, he had developed those who would follow along to take the program a notch higher. He will be missed in his retirement, but I think we should all be thankful he was a part of us.

Our best wishes to Jack. He has earned his place in the sun, and our hearts.●

THE TEXTILE AND APPAREL TRADE ACT

● Mr. KARNES. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Textile and Apparel Trade Act. As my colleagues know, this legislation would impose global quotas on imports of textiles, apparel, and nonrubber footwear. There are many aspects of this legislation that I find disturbing, and which I believe will move the trade policy of this country in the wrong direction. It is important to point out, however, that I believe it is appropriate for the United States to provide interim relief for domestic industries that are being unduly harmed by imports. There are provisions for such interim protection programs under GATT and domestic law. Unfortunately, the legislation before the Senate is inconsistent with existing practice for providing relief to distressed domestic industries. Let me now turn to the specific aspects of the legislation before us that I find troubling.

Whenever there is a question about providing a domestic industry protection against imports, it is important to make a determination about whether the industry in question is being damaged by import competition. While there was a downturn in textile and apparel production earlier in this decade, more recent statistics show that domestic production of these products has rebounded. Also, recent statistics on wool, cotton, and manmade fibers show that mill consumption of these materials is up and that the textile industry's capacity utilization rate is up. Finally, the textile industry is experiencing an upturn in profitability. In the view of this Senator, it may well be the case that we are considering this measure at just the wrong time. The fact is that the textile and apparel market may well be starting to stabilize.

As I stated at the outset, I believe that the legislation before us is inconsistent with accepted standards for providing relief to domestic industries that are being harmed by imports. What I find most distrubing about the remedy sought here is its permanent nature. In the course of the deliberations on the omnibus trade bill, we closely examined the existing law governing what are referred to as section 201 cases. The focus of that debate was, and always has been, on how to provide interim relief for distressed industries in order to make them competitive after the predetermined time for import relief expires. The term of art used to describe this process was "positive adjustment." The trade bill as signed by the President provided that no import relief provided under section 2012 was to last longer than 8 years.

Mr. President, the Textile and Apparel Trade Act contains no provision for positive adjustment. There are no provisions in the bill that establish a program for making the textile, apparel, and nonrubber shoe industries competitive, assuming the industries are in fact noncompetitive. In fact, no references are made as to what would be considered a competitive position. While the bill does establish a review of the quota program that would occur after 10 years, there is no guarantee that the import relief would ever be removed. This sort of permanent protection represents an abandonment of the traditional goal of our trade policy, which is to make our industries competitive in the world marketplace. This is ironic in the view of this Senator because I believe that these industries can be competitive without special relief under the current system.

As I have stated, I believe the textile and apparel industries are competitive under the existing system of international trade. It is important to explain what I mean by the term "existing system of international trade." We must recognize that the textile and apparel industries already receive considerable protection against imports through international agreements. The overall system is governed by the Multi-Fiber Arrangement [MFA]. Under MFA, the United States has bilateral agreements with over 30 countries. Thus, the domestic textile and apparel industries are assured that they are not vulnerable to market disrupting imports. Given this system of international agreements, the domestic industries should be able to compete. It is also important to point out that this international system will be undermined if this bill is enacted into law.

Mr. President, current practice under international agreements governing trade requires that compensation be provided if quotas of the sort contemplated by this bill are enacted. The bill establishes such compensation by authorizing the President to reduce existing duties on textiles, apparel, and nonrubber footwear to no less than 90 percent of the existing rates. According to Ambassador Yeutter, this compensation program is grossly inadequate. This means that the textile exporting countries are likely to retaliate against U.S. exports in response to the establishment of the quotas contemplated by this bill. It is almost inevitable that U.S. agricultural exports will be subject to retaliation. While the Daschle amendment has been incorporated into this bill in an attempt to lessen the risks of retaliation against U.S. agricultural exports, I believe the amendment is inadequate to fully protect our access to foreign markets in agriculture. I will discuss the Daschle amendment in more detail in a moment.

There is another provision related to the compensation program that is also disturbing. This bill prohibits the President from even entering into negotiations, let alone concluding an agreement, to lower import duties on the affected items that fall outside the duty reductions specifically allowed for under the bill. Legislation that prohibits the President from entering into negotiations with foreign countries must be considered constitutionally suspect. The Constitution lodges the responsibility for representing the United States abroad in the office of the President. The Congress must be very careful about attempting to prohibit the President from discussing any specific subject with foreign countries or instrumentalities. The prohibition established in this bill comes very close to the line, if it does not cross it, of intruding into Executive functions.

Mr. President, earlier I alluded to the Daschle amendment, which has been incorporated into this bill. This amendment will increase the quota allocation of those countries that increase purchases of U.S. agricultural products. Specifically, the administration will be required to allocate a higher portion of the global quota on textiles and textile products to each country that increased the quantity of its commercial purchases of U.S. agricultural products over the 2 preceding calendar years. The quantity of any special textile and textile product quota allocation for a qualifying year must be greater than the quantity of those particular products that a country exported to the United States during the preceding year. The administration may, however, allocate portions of the global quota on covered products of countries that do not increase their purchases of U.S. agricultural products, provided the total quota increases stay within the legal aggregate quantity.

This Senator supports the Daschle amendment because it does improve the bill. Compared with the unamended version of the bill, it will make it somewhat less likely that retaliation undertaken by the textile exporting countries will not be directed at U.S. agricultural exports. Also, the amendment changes the bill so that the quotas will take effect prospectively, as opposed to imposing a quota that rolls back imports to levels experienced in prior years. Overall, the Daschle amendment makes modest improvements in the bill.

Unfortunately, the effect of the Daschle amendment is too limited in order to persuade this Senator that it is prudent from the viewpoint of U.S. agriculture and U.S. trade policy to enact this bill. While the amendment will require the President to increase the quota allocations for countries that increase their purchases of U.S. agricultural products, it will do so only within the aggregate quota limitation of 1 percent annual growth. Thus, the system to be established by the Daschle amendment is a zero-sum game. An increase in the quota of a country that increased agricultural purchases would have to come at the expense of other countries. In the event a large percentage of the textile-producing countries increase their imports of U.S. agricultural products, there will be very little room for a large increase in any individual country's textile quota allocation.

The fact is that even with the Daschle amendment the scope of the compensation program in the bill is too small. Agriculture is likely to remain a target for retaliation, particularly with regard to the European countries. The requirement of the Daschle amendment to consider purchases of U.S. agricultural commodities in allocating the quota offers little likelihood of real relief to individual textile producing countries. It is this zero sum quality of the Daschle amendment, compounded by the fact that the compensation program is inadequate, that leads me to conclude that this bill still should not be adopted.

While the Daschle amendment reduces the risk of foreign retaliation against U.S. agricultural exports, the basic proposition set forth by this bill remains the same. The proposition is that the Government provide special protection to the textile and apparel industries on the assumption that the risk of foreign retaliation against U.S. exports, especially agricultural exports, will not be that great. Even with the Daschle amendment, I believe that this is too risky a proposition for American agriculture. Why should American agriculture risk losing export markets in order to give special protection to the textile and apparel industries? When the United States took action to reduce textile imports from China under the multi-fiber arrangement, China threatened to reduce U.S. agricultural imports. In fact, China reduced its purchases of United States wheat by 40 percent from 1982-83 to 1983-84. In this case, the dispute occurred in the context of bilateral negotiations. One can only imagine what the Chinese will do in response to the quotas that would be imposed by this measure. The bottom line is that bill makes it likely that productive and competitive farmers will be forced out of farming in order to protect textile workers whose own industry is asserting are not competitive. Assuming that the textile industry is not competitive, although this is an assumption I do not hold, this measure essentially proposes rewarding noncompetitive textile workers by punishing productive and competitive farmers. It certainly seems to this Senator that this bill, despite the Daschle amendment, puts U.S. agricultural exports at risk in order to benefit the textile and apparel industries.

Thus, Mr. President, for all the reasons stated above, reasons that include: The timing of the bill; the fact that the textile and apparel industries can compete; the fact that there is no positive adjustment program under the bill; the fact that the quotas are to be permanent; the fact that the bill would undermine the existing international agreement in this area; the fact that the bill would tie the President's hands in terms of future trade negotiations; and the fact that the bill is likely to induce foreign retaliation, I must vote against the Textile and Apparel Trade Act. I urge my colleagues, as well, to vote against this legislation.●

McDONNELL DOUGLAS CORP. SALE TO CHINA AIRLINES

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, China Airlines and the McDonnell Douglas Corp. recently signed a contract under which CAL will purchase four MD-11 jet airliners. The four planes will be a significant part of a planned 10-plane purchase aimed at modernizing the airline's long-range fleet.

This is a significant sale which will bring long-term benefits for both the United States and the Republic of China. Not only will the sale have a positive impact on employment in both countries, it will have a positive impact on our bilateral relations.

The U.S. aerospace industry is critical to our national and economic security, and it plays a major role in our effort to expand exports and bring our trade deficit under control. McDonnell Douglas has long played a significant role in this industry. It is a pleasure to offer my congratulations to the company's workers on this most recent success. In addition, I congratulate China Airline officials on their decision to purchase American-made aircraft.●

MARION GRAY

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, we all know that without interns from our home States, life in the Senate would be a great deal more hectic than it already is.

I have had an intern program operating in my office for more than a decade. It provides a unique opportunity for young Vermonters to learn about their Government through direct participation.

But why just young Vermonters? It occurred to me some time ago that some of our older Vermonters might very much enjoy this same experience.

Marion Gray, of Barre, the Granite Center of the World, recently spent a busy day in my office, in a program sponsored by the Close-Up Foundation.

Marion listened and participated in discussions with other Senators and staffers on subjects ranging from health care to the debate over the INF Treaty.

When we finished the day together, we were both tired but filled with a feeling of accomplishment.

On her return to Vermont, Marion wrote a report for the Senior Herald, a newspaper that does a marvelous job of informing senior citizens on important issues affecting their interests.

Mr. President, I ask that Marion's observations, which were printed in the August edition of this publication, be reprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I would especially recommend it for reading by those Senators who do not have a senior intern program at the present time. As you can see from Marion's experience, it is certainly worth doing.

The article follows:

VERMONTER GOES TO WASHINGTON, GETS A LESSON IN GOVERNMENT

(By Marion Gray)

I was chosen by Senator Leahy to be his senior intern in Washington for 1988. I was one of 200 interns, the only Vermonter. We interns were from all parts of the U.S. and held a multitude of deeply felt convictions. Seemingly the only thing we had in common was our age.

Every congressman may, if he or she chooses, participate in the Senior Intern Program, in which the chosen seniors are taken to Washington to study the working of our government. The program has been cosponsored by Senator Cochran and Representative Coelho; this year they decided to get the Close-Up Foundation to run the program. Close-Up Foundation's purpose is to give high school students an intensive week studying the federal government. We were shepherded around Washington by a wonderful group of Close-Up's young adults who know and love Washington, its buildings, policies and politics. The young adults were geared to the pace of their unusual 18-year-old students, and some of the seniors were huffing and puffing. Vermonters will be glad to hear that I never faltered!

The Close-Up Foundation is aware the most important issue for seniors is health care; therefore, that was the issue we spent most of our time discussing. We heard from senators and representatives or their staffs who are committed to health care issues.

Our first speaker was Senator Dole, who emphasized how necessary it is for Congress to work together and make compromises; otherwise no laws could be passed.

I sat in the Senate Visitor's Gallery one day and watched the last struggle the Senate was having to ratify the INF treaty before it could go to the Soviet Union. The polite iciness had evaporated and the rebuilding of a working Senate was in progress. It was a great lesson in government for me to watch because some of our senior interns were pushing for things I thought unconstitutional and highly distasteful. I had been thinking, "I could never work with those particular individuals." Compromise does it (and numbers help!)

I had never been in such an all-American cross-section of people since I was 18 and a 4-H Club Delegate to Washington. What a variety of dreams and plans we have here in America.

In Senator Leahy's office I met his dedicated staff and was again impressed by the important work our senator is doing for all of the U.S.A.

Because women can't live by politics alone I saw the musical "Cats" and spent one day at the National Gallery until my feet said "enough."

Thank you, Senator Leahy, and everyone who made my trip possible. I loved it!●

NATIONAL BIBLE WEEK, NOVEMBER 20-27

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, in 1940, 11 New York businessmen founded the Laymen's National Bible Association out of concern for the spiritual well being of the United States on the brink of world war. Now in its 48th year, the association is once again sponsoring "National Bible Week" with the concerns for the values and spirit of America just as pertinent today.

The Laymen's National Bible Association is an interfaith, nonsectarian organization wholly directed by laymen and women with no official sponsorship from or ties with any faith group, denomination, or church. Its current national chairman is Wiliam S. Kanaga, chairman of the advisory board for Arthur Young & Co. and chairman-elect of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Marian Anderson, Joe Gibbs, the Reverend Dr. Billy Graham, the Reverend Dr. Theodore Hesburgh, and Dr. Michael Wyschogrod are among the honorary cochairpersons with Representative G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY, of Mississippi and myself as congressional cochairmen.

Although National Bible Week, November 20-27, 1988, will be heralded by a public service media campaign as well as local observances in over 7,500 communities conducted by civic groups, schools, libraries, churches, and synagogues, we can also add our support from the Senate. I urge you to join me in reaching out to constituents with information and encouragement as "National Bible Week" approaches.

It is a fitting time in our Nation's history to recall for ourselves and our fellow citizens, the words of Isaiah: "Search the Book of the Lord and see all that He will do. * * *"●

JAMES A. MICHENER ARTS CENTER OF BUCKS COUNTY

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise today to join the citizens of Bucks County in celebrating the opening of the James A. Michener Arts Center of Bucks County. This facility will certainly be a vital addition to the Bucks County Cultural Complex, with the Arts Center, the Mercer Museum and the Bucks County Library Center all in this immediate area. This complex constitutes an enclave of learning and art for which the people of Bucks County should be justifiably proud.

On behalf of the residents of Doylestown and Bucks County, I would like to offer my appreciation and gratitude to James and Mari Michener for their commitment to that area. James Michener is, without question, one of the finest American novelists of his time. He has received world-wide acclaim for his work, which has educated and entertained tens of millions. Yet, he has not forgotten where his success all began. For some 30 years James and Mari Michener have been committed to making this day possible. Because of their strong sense of the importance of roots, there will now be a haven so that the arts can continue to grow and flourish in Bucks County.

Mr. President, it is indeed a pleasure to join in congratulations and best wishes for a successful opening and many years of productive use in this exciting new facility within the very special community of Bucks County, PA.●

COLORADO'S CLEAN AIR EFFORTS

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, 100 years ago doctors recommended patients with respiratory problems move to the dry air of Denver, CO. But, today a doctor might recommend patients move from Denver because of the aggravating effects of air pollution on heart and lung diseases.

Fortunately, Coloradans are tackling head on the complex and challenging task of cleaning Colorado's air. As one example, the Denver Post reports on innovative advances in electric car technology by Coloradans, and I ask that the article be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

ENGLEWOOD FIRM CHARGES AHEAD TO SPARK REALITY OF ELECTRIC CAR

(By John Eaton)

Convinced that environmental worries eventually will force us out of conventional cars, a small Englewood company is forging ahead with revolutionary new designs that may make the idea of an electric car more practical.

How about an electric car that would outperform current race cars? Or a van that could deliver goods all day at a fraction of the cost of conventional, internal-combustion vehicles?

Unique Mobility Inc., 3700 S. Jason St., believes it's possible.

The company, which pioneered the design of early electric vehicles, has developed a new electric-motor drive system that a few years ago would have been considered futuristic.

SMALL, LIGHT, EFFICIENT

It is small, light, efficient, cuts pollution, doesn't need lots of heavy batteries and contains enough new ideas that Unique has applied for patents in 40 countries. The motors could be fed by small, low-pollution gas engines turning electric generators.

Unique plans to embark on a 3½-year, $4 million research and development project to further develop electric drive systems and vehicles. The work is being made possible by a recent agreement with Alcan Aluminum Limited, which recently purchased 7.5 percent of Uniques' current outstanding common stock.

Unique plans to build the revolutionary car using methods similar to those used to create a special vehicle for ABC Television for use during the 1984 Olympic marathon races. That vehicle carried the cameras and had to be non-polluting because it was driven immediately ahead of the runners.

The company began making battery-powered electrical cars in the late '70s, reasoning they were the vehicles of the future. But the ensuing oil glut and plentiful gasoline—plus the fact that early battery-powered electric cars were impractical—forced Unique to refocus its research on new motor designs.

Ray Geddes, Unique's chairman, and John Gould, president, say the concept they use isn't new. In fact, they scaled down the same technology that has been used for years in the common diesel-powered railroad engine: The train's diesel engine powers a generator that, in turn, supplies electric power to the drive wheels.

But Unique has shaved literally tons off the weight and invented an electric drive system that eliminates virtually all the heavy components common to all conventional vehicles—heavy internal-combustion engines, transmissions, axles, drive shafts and brakes.

To describe the system fully would require a treatise, understood only by electrical engineers, but the key to Unique's plan is its new down-sized, but powerful motor. Currently, Unique is working on a 20-pound motor equal to a conventional motor weighing 255 pounds. A major manufacturer, Gould says, has estimated that the Unique system would subtract 800 pounds from that company's current 4-by-4 full-sized utility vehicle.

Unique's plan is to use the motors to provide a separate power source inside each wheel. Each motor would not only power the wheel, but also would serve as a brake. Power to each motor would be instantaneous and controlled by an "accelerator" that would operate similar to a volume control on a radio.

Both Geddes and Gould envision a car that could do 0-100 mph in 10 seconds. That kind of vehicle particularly appeals to Geddes, who has a long record of involvement with high-performance cars. He was with Ford for many years and was instrumental in developing the 427SC Ford, Cobra, the Shelby Mustang and the Ford Pantera.

But the concept could apply equally to lawnmowers, delivery vans, trains, specialized military vehicles, to say nothing of uses yet to be devised for aerospace.●

SPACE LEADERSHIP

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, the U.S. space program has largely been on hold the 2½ years since the Challenger accident, and other nations are eagerly filling the gap left by the United States. Europeans launch satellites once scheduled for the shuttle, and the Soviets are proceeding on more ambitious long-term space exploration goals.

Recent editorials and articles question the implications for the United States. The Denver Post asks, "Are we really ready to be designated No. 2 in expanding the frontiers of space?"

The Washington Times headlines, "The Space Race: We're Number Two!," and concludes, " * * * the Soviet space program should be seen as a continuation of their quest for world domination, only in another place. If we fail to counter these efforts, self-congratulatory phrases about our superior concerns for global problems will be of little consolation when we awake one day to discover we have been outflanked."

Mr. President, I ask that recent articles and editorials about other nation's space activities from the Denver Post, Washington Times, and Time magazine be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

[From the Washington Times]

THE SPACE RACE: WE'RE NUMBER TWO!

Since the Soviet Union launched Sputnik 31 years ago, the United States has responded with a hare-like bound to the moon, an abortive anti-ballistic missile program, an on-again off-again shuttle program, a meagerly funded Strategic Defense Initiative and a Hamlet's approach to a permanently manned space station. Last week's Senate approval of a piddling $200 million for the space station will do more to kill it than keep it alive.

Meanwhile, moved by a clear vision of the dawning strategic necessity of first dominating space as an overturn to dominating the earth, the Soviets are capturing the lead in virtually every category of space program:

BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE

In the late '60s and early '70s the United States conceived, debated and discarded the idea of a ground-based nationwide defense against intercontinental ballistic missiles. In 1966, however, the Soviets began incremental deployment of just such a system, surrounding Moscow with ABMs. A few years ago, they began upgrading the system with two new classes of missiles moved into underground silos. The Soviet capital now enjoys a two-tiered strategic defense: One set of rockets, nuclear-armed, will attack incoming missiles in space and can double as an anti-satellite weapon; another set of rockets will destroy warheads after re-entry.

Despite the ABM Treaty, by which the United States traded off its own program of anti-missile defense, the Soviets are building six new phased array Krasnoyarsk-type radars which, when paired with existing Hen House radars, will give them the ability to battle-manage a nationwide strategic defense.

ANTI-SATELLITE SYSTEMS

In 1963, the United States deployed anti-satellite rockets capable of knocking out some Soviet reconnaissance and communications satellites. The program was suspended in 1976. Meanwhile, the Soviets began testing anti-satellite weapons in 1965 and now have deployed or are developing a variety of means for destroying U.S. satellites in orbits as high as 1,000 kilometers. These include a "co-orbiter" that moves into orbit beside the target satellite and explodes, and a "direct ascent" rocket such as the Galosh ABM that doubles in protecting Moscow. In the testing phase are two ground-based anti-satellite laser beams at Sary Shagan and a "directed energy" beam at Dushanbe just north of the Afghanistan border.

The United States has resumed development of anti-satellite weapons but has not yet deployed any. With their large reserves of launchers, the Soviets could do significant damage to U.S. space-based intelligence and communications assets at the outbreak of a conflict.

Space shuttles: Until the Challenger disaster, the space shuttle was a symbol of U.S. technological superiority. But as the next launch suffers from chronic postponement, the Soviets are developing two separate shuttle systems. In 1982, they began test flights of a small space plane that looks much like a mini-shuttle, and they also are developing a large-scale space plane, presumably to be used in connection with their space station program, to be deployed sometime in the next decade.

Expendable launch vehicles: The United States has four expendable launch systems. The Titan, which is the largest, can lift 15,000 tons to an altitude of 185 kilometers. The Soviet Union has nine different expendable launch vehicles, tailored to a wide variety of payloads. The largest and newest is the Energiya, a monster that perhaps can launch a whopping 100,000 tons to 185 kilometers.

In the future, heavy lifters such as the Energiya will be crucial to rocketing the massive components of a space station into orbit. NASA and the Defense Department are currently working on an advanced Titan that will launch 17,800 tons to 185 kilometers. It will be technologically superior to the Energiya, but less then one-fifth as effective in boosting cargo into space.

Space stations: Starting in 1971, the Soviets tried to orbit a series of seven Solyut space stations. Three men died returning from the first; one failed on launch, and two more fizzled before ever receiving cosmonauts. The other three featured the standard Soviet technical and operational glitches. But in 1986 they launched a new, expandable model, the Mir; and the Soviets are now approaching the capability of maintaining a permanent manned presence in space.

Manned planetary exploration: Less than two weeks ago, the Soviets launched an unmanned probe to the Martian moon Phobos. It is the first of a series of unmanned reconnaissance and scientific research programs that will prepare the Soviets for placing men on the red planet by the year 2010.

The United States is not expected to launch another unmanned mission to Mars until 1992. In that year the Soviets are planning to map the planet for prospective landing sites. With a space station and the heavy-lift Energiya, the Soviets are well on their way to being able to build a manned Marscraft, which because of bulk must be constructed in space. With or without U.S. cooperation, the Soviets are going to Mars.

This brings us back to the Senate's scuttling of the U.S. space station. Just as Clausewitz concluded that war is a continuation of politics by other means, the Soviet space program should be seen as a continuation of their quest for world domination, only in another place. If we fail to counter these efforts, self-congratulatory phrases about our superior concerns for global problems will be of little consolation when we awake one day to discover we have been outflanked.

EUROPEANS STEAL A MARCH ON SPACE-LAUNCH INDUSTRY

(By Warren Strobel)

KOUROU, FRENCH GUIANA.—Europe's ambitious attempt to dominate the world space-launch industry has emerged from nearly a decade of ups and downs, boosting satellites into orbit as predictably as tropical rains pelt this South American space center.

While the United States struggles to rebound from the shuttle disaster and build, almost from scratch, commercially available expendable rockets, the Ariane program has been quietly racking up an impressive—and lucrative—string of successes.

In June, it launched the first Ariane 4, a large and adaptable new rocket that will be the program's workhorse through the mid-1990s. Preparations are under way here for construction of a third launch-pad to accommodate an even larger booster.

"Due to the circumstances, we are now the leader, it is clear," Frederic d'Allest, president of Arianespace Inc., the French-dominated firm that produces, markets and launches the rockets, said in an interview.

His wary confidence was widely shared here last week during preparations for Ariane's latest successful launch, which carried Indian and European communications satellites into orbit.

As the countdown progressed methodically, launch team and VIPs watched from a control room, reminiscent of similar NASA facilities, in a four-story, white-orange building, one of a cluster that make up the Guiana Space Center.

A few miles up the French Guianese coast and just 16 minutes behind schedule, the Ariane 3 rocket struggled skyward over the Atlantic Ocean in a dramatic nighttime launch, accompanied by cheers and whistles from the space center.

It was the sixth Ariane booster to lift off from here since September and a launch that an American aerospace industry official said privately offers final proof that the design flaw, which caused a 1986 launch failure and an 18-month shutdown in the program, is fixed. Four more launches are on tap for 1988.

The company's order books, fattened by spacecraft once destined for U.S. shuttles, show 40 satellites worth $2.4 billion—a whopping two-thirds of the world market and enough to keep its rockets busy until sometime in 1991.

Arianespace insists its goal is not a chokehold on the industry, but a 50 percent market share and a steady 10 to 11 launches per year.

"They have a not-bad chance of doing that," said Jerry Grey, director of science and technology policy at the American Institute of Astronautics and Aeronautics, a Washington-based professional group.

But even as Ariane reaches the peak of its profitability, its long-term future is less clear.

The company, which snapped up 17 launch contracts between May 1986 and December 1987, has won just four in 1988—one from France, one from West Germany and two more from India.

"It was a question of the availability of the launch schedule and the price," said Pramod Kale, director of the Indian Space Research Organization's space applications center. India will pay more than $100 million for its first two Insat 2 satellites to ride on Ariane in the early 1990s.

Even as the demand for space launches flags, Ariane faces increasing competition for the remaining business from the United States and, more ominously, nations such as the Soviet Union and China that are offering their rockets at bargain-basement prices.

Both European and U.S. officials say they fear the latter more than they do each other.

Few here doubt that longtime U.S. rocket makers, freed from competing with the NASA-owned space shuttle, will challenge Ariane's primacy after beginning private launches of their own next year.

Even as he acknowledged Ariane's No. 1 status, Mr. d'Allest said: "It is clear the U.S. companies will catch up."

Already, U.S. aerospace giants such as McDonnell Douglas have begun winning contracts that two years ago would have gone to Ariane. They have booked 20 payloads, although some of the craft belong to the U.S. government and others are double-booked on Ariane.

The U.S. expendable-rocket industry "will come back in force," predicted Max A. Hauzeur, the European Space Agency's top representative in Kourou. ESA developed the Ariane program in the 1970s and then turned it over to the private sector.

But Arianespace appears to have several competitive edges, not the least of which is the launch site itself. Kourou, on South America's northeast coast, has more predictable weather than the Cape Canaveral, Fla., is far from population centers, and is just 6 degrees north of the equator where, because of Earth's rotation, it takes less fuel to get into space.

Another important advantage, Mr. d'Allest said, is that the Ariane family was designed specifically for commercial missions, while U.S. launchers were first built for military ones.

"We are building rockets . . . because we have identified the wishes and needs of our customers," he said. "It is not extraordinary. It is a normal approach for a business-oriented company. . . . But it was new in this business. And we were the first to do it."

The Ariane 4, which Arianespace will buy en masse to reduce costs, is an example of the company's pragmatic, relatively low-tech philosophy.

Based largely on previous models, it comes in six configurations, created by simply strapping on liquid- and solid-fueled boosters. The rocket, Ariane's sole launcher between 1989 and 1995, can lift small commercial payloads as well as the larger satellites of the future.

The Europeans also have unfailingly learned from American mistakes.

With an older launch pad scheduled for retirement next year and the new one still on the drawing board, Ariane's success will depend, as have many U.S. space programs, on a single pad.

To ensure that an on-the-pad explosion doesn't wipe out its ability to launch for several years, the European Space Agency has specially hardened the pad, stockpiled spare parts and created launch tables that can be replaced within a day.

"If there is a blow-up, we should be able to have it operational in six to eight months," Mr. Hauzeur said.

Are We Being Left Behind?

Soviet scientists have decided to go to Mars all by themselves, regardless of whether their United States counterparts decide to join them.

The USSR launched a robot mission to Phobos, a Martian moon, two weeks ago and a second one last week. Eleven nations are participating in that exploration, with the U.S. relegated to a ground-based role. America has been cool to suggestions of joint U.S.-USSR future missions to the ironically nicknamed Red Planet. The Soviets, nonetheless, are planning unmanned missions to Mars in 1994 and 2000 and then the climax—a manned mission to Earth's neighboring planet in 2010.

The Soviet effort is getting a great deal of attention in the U.S. because of the apparent dormancy of our space program. The Soviets were the first into space, orbiting a satellite in 1957. But the U.S. was the first to put humans on another celestial body—just 12 years later, in 1969. Almost 20 years have passed since the U.S. went to the moon; its space progress since then has been marked in less dramatic, but nonetheless important, technological feats. Now the Soviets are ahead of us, 3-1, in astronaut hours in space.

A recently released seven-volume report on NASA priorities extending into the next century lists several goals, but most of them involve robots, not humans:

Return soil samples to Earth from Mars, Venus and the moon (as part of planning a permanent lunar base).

Probe Jupiter's thick atmosphere and place landers on the moons of Jupiter and Saturn.

Increase the space-based observation of Earth with more sophisticated satellites sensitively attuned to ecology and geology.

Human exploration of Mars and return visits to the moon are also on the list, but the timetable isn't as solid as the Soviets'.

And none of this has quite the drama of putting men and women from this planet on another planet—a planet that might possibly have had living creatures on its surface in the distant past.

The lunar missions captured the imagination and fired the ambition of many Americans—but that was a generation ago. Now we are beginning to wonder whether we're being left behind.

Plans change, of course. Whether our next president is George Bush or Michael Dukakis, it will be a different administration in Washington, with perhaps a different philosophy about the place of interplanetary space exploration in our national priorities.

While the nation welcomes the easing of competitive pressure with the Soviets in one area—the race to have more and bigger planet-cracking nuclear weapons—are we really ready to be designated No. 2 in expanding the frontiers of space?

Onward to Mars—A Dramatic Launch Heralds a New Era of Missions to the Red Planet

(From the Kennedy Space Center and the Soviet Union's Bailonur Cosmodrome, powerful shuttles and unmanned rockets lift off week after week, bearing construction modules and fuel supplies to a giant space station in earth orbit. There, skilled workers have been assembling the ship that will take the first humans to Mars. After more than a year of construction, the million-pound, ungainly looking spacecraft is ready. With a crew of eight, it separates from the space station and heads for Mars, following the Hohmann ellipse, a space trajectory that may one day be as familiar as a great-circle route over the North Atlantic.

(Twenty days later, the blue-white earth has shrunk to a bright dot of light against the background of stars in the eternal night of outer space. Looking back, the crew members are filled with a sense of isolation, a feeling that will never quite leave them during the 280-day outbound leg of their journey. A busy schedule provides some distraction. The space travelers perform scientific experiments, practice taking shelter against solar-flare radiation, tend vegetables in their hydroponic greenhouses, exercise vigorously for several hours each day and tap into digital libraries for music, light reading matter and courses in Martian meteorology and geology.

(At first they are able to communicate easily with controllers on earth. But as they head farther into space, the time required for their radio signals to reach earth lengthens to minutes, and the ever widening gap between questions and answers makes conversation difficult. Now, with the earth more than 100 million miles away, Mars is looming in the spacecraft portholes, and the crew begins preparing for a yearlong adventure on another world.)

A manned trip to Mars, long the stuff of science fiction, now appears to be just a matter of time. The mystic planet, glowing red and ever brighter in the night skies, is heading toward its closest approach to the earth in 17 years this September, tantalizingly near and beckoning. After a hiatus of a dozen years, during which neither the U.S. nor the Soviet Union mounted missions to Mars, a spacecraft is once again on its way, opening a new era in the exploration of the earth's closest planetary neighbor. During the next decade or so, the Soviets will launch a series of increasingly sophisticated unmanned Mars probes that they hope will culminate in a joint U.S.-Soviet manned mission to the Red Planet by the year 2010.

Last week that trip moved a step closer to reality. From its launching pad at the Baikonur space complex, near Tyuratam in the Soviet republic of Kazakhstan, a Proton rocket carrying an unmanned spacecraft rose on an orange and blue column of fire that illuminated the night sky. Turning lazily eastward, the rocket sent the craft off on an ambitious mission: to scout Mars and probe Phobos, one of its two tiny moons. Far below at the sprawling complex, technicians swarmed over a sister ship that is scheduled to be launched this week on a similar mission. Exulted Roald Sagdeyev, director of the Soviet Space Research Institute: "Now we can go and drink champagne!"

Even as the celebration went on, the thoughts of space experts turned to future Mars odysseys. Scientists and engineers in both the U.S. and the Soviet Union are involved in the design of complex unmanned craft that will travel to the planet. Some American scientists are even conducting tests on a model of the robotic vehicle that may one day rove the Martian surface. Others are considering the ships that will carry human crews to Mars, the orbiting space station needed to launch them, the size and safety of the crews and the most practical routes through space. Though some formidable problems remain, many Soviet and U.S. experts see no insurmountable obstacles to landing humans on Mars early in the 21st century.

While the American space program has been crippled since the Challenger disaster in Janaury 1986, Soviet cosmonauts have been gaining invaluable experience aboard the orbiting Salyut and Mir space stations. And though U.S. astronauts are scheduled to return to space this September in the shuttle Discovery, which was wheeled to its Kennedy Space Center launching pad last week, NASA Administrator James Fletcher concedes that the Soviets are now "way ahead of us in manned flight." If each nation goes its own way, he predicts, the Soviets could land humans on Mars at least five year before the U.S. could.

Stifled by budget cuts and foundering without clear-cut goals, NASA has scheduled only one Mars probe, the Mars observer, which will go into orbit around the planet in 1993 to collect data on climate and geology. And while President Reagan agreed at the recent Moscow summit to a cautious joint communiqué describing "scientific missions to the moon and Mars" as "areas of possible bilateral and international cooperation," the Administration has been at best lukewarm to the concept of exploring Mars, jointly or otherwise.

Among other Americans, however, the idea of a manned Mars mission is gaining momentum, despite the estimated $100 billion price tag for the undertaking. The venture has been endorsed by a dozen major publications, ranging from the New York Times to the New Republic. In a recent full-page advertisement in the Washington Post, the 125,000-member Planetary Society urged support for a manned mission. The ad listed the names of a glittering array of such prominent Americans as Walter Cronkite, Jimmy Carter, Utah Senator Jake Garn, Nobel Laureate Physicist Hans Bethe and Notre Dame's former president, the Rev. Theodore Hesburgh. All of them have signed the Society's "Mars declaration," which advocates a U.S. space program that would lead to the human exploration of Mars.

In Congress, too, support is growing, despite strong opposition from those who fear that a manned Mars trip would soak up funds needed for social programs, unmanned scientific space probes and military projects, among other things. Democratic Senator Spark Matsunaga of Hawaii has even written a book, The Mars Project, that strongly advocates the space journey.

While the U.S. space program languishes, scientists from twelve European nations, the European Space Agency and the U.S. are participating in the phobos mission, contributing technical expertise, instrumentation and onboard experiments to the Mars-bound ships. The U.S. is lending a hand with its superior Deep Space Tracking Network, which will aid the Soviets in navigating and keeping tabs on their craft. Another U.S. contribution, aboard one of the Phobos probes: a plaque honoring Astronomer Asaph Hall of the U.S. Naval Observatory, who in 1877 discovered Phobos and the other little Martian moon, Deimos (both named after the sons of the Greek god of war, and meaning fear and terror).

U.S. space watchers are impressed by the boldness, originality and scope of the Phobos operation. The twin Soviet probes will arrive at Mars in January 1989, easing into orbit about 4,000 miles above the planet's surface, or 140 miles higher than the orbit of Phobos. For four months the two probes will circle Mars in various orbits, peering down at possible future landing sites and using remote-sensing devices to investigate the landscape and weather.

Their scrutiny of Mars completed, first one probe and then the other will be sent by controllers to rendezvous with potato-shaped Phobos, which, like Deimos, is believed to be an errant asteroid that was captured by Martian gravity. Each craft, in turn, will descend as low as 100 ft. above Phobos. Maneuvering like cruise missiles, they will follow the contours of the landscape as their television cameras pick out surface features.

All the while, the versatile craft will be anlyzing the composition of Phobos with two Buck Rogers-like devices. One, a laser beam only a millimeter in diameter, will vaporize first one spot and then another on the tiny moon, which is only 17 miles at its widest point, while an onboard instrument determines the chemical makeup of the vapor spewing up from each spot. Another beam consisting of krypton ions will bombard the moonlet, and an onboard mass spectrometer will identify the ions given off by the blasted surface materials.

Eventually each of the probes will release a lander that will rocket down onto the moonlet and shoot an attached "penetrator" into the surface as an anchor, essential because of the weak gravity (one-thousandth of the earth's gravitational pull). The solar-powered landers will then radio directly back to earth data on changes in the moon's gravitational field, thermal expansion and seismic noise. As if that were not enough, the frenetic probes will each drop a two-legged, domed "hopper" onto Phobos. After examining surface material and searching for magnetic fields at their landing sites, the hoppers will draw up spring-loaded, metal-alloy legs and, like giant frogs, leap about 20 yards to a new location, where the observations will be repeated. Each hopper is expected to make about ten leaps, reporting back each time by radio, until its battery runs out.

"These missions are novel and trail-blazing," says Cornell University Astronomer Carl Sagan, president of the Planetary Society and the man who first proposed a joint manned mission to Mars. "In terms of science, we'll all find out a lot about Phobos." Furthermore, he says, "in the long run, Phobos could act as a staging platform for human missions to Mars. It could also be a place where humans could live and work while they control robotic explorers on the surface of Mars."

Ever since they first peered into the night skies, humans have been awed and intrigued by Mars' baleful red glare. Ancient civilizations bestowed on the planet the name of their god of war. It was named Ares by the Greeks, Mars by the Romans. When the first telescopes revealed that the planets were neither specks of light nor gods but worlds, perhaps like earth, the notion grew that Mars might harbor life. Noting variations between the bright and dark areas of the planet, British Astronomer Sir William Herschel in 1784 attributed them to "clouds and vapors" and concluded that Mars had an atmosphere and that "its inhabitants probably enjoy a situation in many respects similar to our own."

German Mathematician Karl Gauss assumed that those inhabitants were intelligent. In 1820 he proposed growing a huge wheat field in Siberia in the form of a right triangle, surrounded by pine trees, that could be seen from afar. That would demonstrate to the Martians, Gauss figured, that earthlings not only existed but understood mathematics.

But was there any real evidence that Martians existed? After peering through his telescope in 1877, Italian Astronomer Giovanni Schiaparelli (an uncle of the celebrated Paris couturiere) reported that he had charted several dozen canali linking dark areas on the surface of Mars. These canali, the astronomer wrote, "present an indescribable simplicity and symmetry that cannot possibly be the work of chance."

No one was more excited by this revelation than a wealthy American mathematician, diplomat and astronomer, Percival Lowell of Boston, who established an observatory in Arizona and dedicated it to the study of Mars. By 1908, influenced in part by optical illusions and wishful thinking, Lowell had counted and named hundreds of canals, which he believed were part of a large network conveying water from the polar ice caps to the parched cities of an arid and dying planet. Lowell's observations and musings, in turn, inspired British novelist H.G. Wells to write The War of the Worlds, a dramatic account of an invasion of the earth by octopus-like Martians. In 1938 a radio adaptation of that novel by another man named Welles—Orson, that is—panicked many Americans who believed that a real Martian invasion was under way.

Even after the mighty 200-in. Mount Palomar telescope revealed no evidence at all of networks of straight lines or other manifestations of intelligent life on Mars, the fascination continued. Fredric Brown's novel Martians, Go Home, Ray Bradbury's The Martian Chronicles, Robert Heinlein's novel Stranger in a Strange Land, and the popular Buck Rogers comic strip all involved encounters with Martians of various sizes, shapes and consistencies.

Finally, in 1965, the triumphant mission of the U.S. spacecraft Mariner 4 brought some reality to musings about Mars. The craft flew past the planet at a distance of only 6,100 miles, transmitting 22 television pictures of a bleak, moonlike landscape, pockmarked by craters and showing no signs of life. Even so, hope persisted. To demonstrate that a Mariner flyby at a distance of thousands of miles might completely overlook a thriving civilization, a young and still unknown Carl Sagan that same year sifted through a thousand pictures of earth shot by a weather satellite orbiting only 300 miles up. In a paper entitled "Is There Life on Earth?" he reported that only one photograph, of a snow-covered superhighway cutting a straight line through a forest, showed any evidence of man's presence on this planet.

When Mariner 9 was successfully inserted into low orbit around Mars in 1971, a planetwide dust storm obscured its vision for six weeks. After the dust settled, Mariner's cameras revealed a fascinating landscape: towering volcanoes, great canyons, lava flows and a multitude of craters in the red-hued plains. What excited scientists and Mars buffs the most, however, was the unmistakable traces of dry riverbeds and deltas etched into the rock, evidence that water had once flowed freely on the Martian surface. Had life evolved on Mars while water was still ample? And might living organisms still exist there, perhaps in microscopic form?

It was in part to answser such questions that the U.S. Viking 1 and 2 spacecraft, each consisting of an orbiter and a lander, were dispatched to Mars. When they arrived, 45 days apart, in 1976, cameras abroad the orbiters snapped away and remote-sensing devices searched for water vapor in the thin atmosphere and sought out frozen water in the polar ice caps. On the surface, the landers began providing the most accurate measurements yet of Martian surface temperatures, atmospheric density and wind velocity, while the cameras shot more than 4,500 spectacular close-up pictures of the surrounding, rock-strewn landscape. Each lander was also equipped with an arm that scooped up soil samples and fed them to a little onboard biological laboratory, where they were analyzed for any signs of metabolic activity, which would signify life.

The first soil sample briefly breathed new life into the Mars mystique. After being moistened inside the lab, it suddenly released an unexpectedly high burst of oxygen, setting off a flurry of speculation among scientists on earth. Did the oxygen come from some tiny form of Martian life in the soil? After the further tests failed to confirm those first results, scientists reluctantly concluded that the large amount of oxygen had probably been produced by a simple chemical reaction between water vapor and some unidentified oxygen-rich compound in the soil sample.

Some scientists, Soviet and American alike, have still not abandoned hope of finding life or its remnants deeper in the Martian soil. There life forms might have access to water and be protected from the fierce solar ultraviolet radiation that rains down on the surface, virtually unobstructed by the Martian atmosphere. Sedimentary rocks in the ancient riverbeds would be an ideal place to hunt for fossils of organisms that may have lived when Mars was more benign, with a thicker atmosphere, warmer climate and running water on its surface.

For these reasons alone, Mars enthusiasts say, further exploration of the Red Planet, both unmanned and manned, is scientifically justified. "There is a growing sense of purpose being attached to a manned flight to Mars, both in the Soviet Union and the U.S.," says Vyacheslav Balebanov, a deputy director of the Space Research Institute of the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Like most of his counterparts in the U.S., he would prefer a measured, logical, step-by-step program to a more hazardous, hastily mounted manned mission. "We must start to explore Mars in detail before such a flight is possible," he says.

That is just what the Soviets plan to do. In 1992, when America's Mars Observer is scheduled to fly, they hope to send a third Phobos spacecraft into Mars orbit carrying advanced remote-sensing devices, including a radar mapper that will seek out the best landing sites for future missions. Two years later, the Soviets intend to launch a pair of highly sophisticated landers to Mars. Each will carry a small computer-controlled surface rover, a six-wheeled vehicle capable of traveling as far as 60 miles from the lander. It will be equipped with TV cameras, scoops and drills to sample materials and a minilab to analyze them. With information gained from this mission, the Soviets hope to launch as early as 1998 a larger Mars lander-rover that could return soil samples to earth.

While the U.S. lacks a strong commitment to sending humans to Mars, the Administration's space policy, announced by President Reagan in February, does envision eventual "human exploration of the solar system." Toward that end, NASA has launched Project Pathfinder, a program to develop 18 new space technologies. They include compact nuclear reactors for powering lunar or Martian bases, in-space construction and assembly of spacecraft, and orbiting fuel depots for moon and Mars ships. "You can talk about going to Mars," says Pathfinder Leader Robert Rosen, "but you can't do it without these technologies." Congress appropriated $40 million for the project's first year.

Pathfinder did not start from scratch. NASA and the aerospace industry have long planned a variety of Mars missions that could lead to a manned flight. At NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., scientists are designing an unmanned rover with six wheels, each more than 3 ft. in diameter, to accommodate the rocky Martian terrain. In a still unapproved mission, the rover, imbued with artificial intelligence and television eyes, would seek out appropriate rock samples and stow them in a craft designed to return them to earth for analysis. At NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., experts are designing living quarters for the space station that the U.S. hopes to begin assembling in earth orbit in the mid-1990s. Plans call for private sleeping cubicles, each equipped with a TV, sound systems and a computer. Mars enthusiasts point out that approval of a manned Mars mission as a goal would finally provide a compelling rationale for the projected $30 billion space station that NASA has had trouble selling to a reluctant Congress. "The station would be needed to serve as an assembly point," says NASA's Brian Pritchard, who has studied the feasibility of such a plan. "We don't have the power to lift from 1 million to 3 million lbs. [the weight of the Mars ship] into orbit from the earth."

Why so huge a craft? In addition to carrying a million or more pounds of fuel, the ship must accommodate and sustain human beings for as long as three years. Just to exist in space for one day, for example, each crew member will require several pounds of oxygen, 4 lbs. of water and 3 lbs. of food. Consequently, for a crew of eight on a 900-day mission, a Mars spacecraft would have to carry as much as 40 tons of provisions alone. Any added weight would require using—and carrying—even more fuel, both for pulling away from the earth and launching from Mars for the return trip.

There is an alternative to a fully stocked larder: recycling, the recovery of water and oxygen from waste products. NASA has developed prototypers for reclaiming pure water from urine and wash waters, and oxygen from the carbon dioxide exhaled by astronauts. For their part, the Soviets have been retrieving some of their water for years, condensing it from the exhaled, humid air in the spacecraft. But Arkadi Ushakov, of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, concedes that the recovery systems in use today cannot meet the demands of two- or three-year missions. He believes a Mars ship will have to contain its own biosphere of renewable plant and water resources.

Toward that goal, Soviet researchers are investigating natural recovery systems: plants that will not only serve as food but also, in the process of metabolizing, absorb carbon dioxide and produce oxygen. The best performers so far, Uskakov says, are traditional food plants like carrots, sugar beets, and salad greens. At the Kennedy Space Center, NASA scientists are trying to develop what they call a "self-contained bioregenerative support system." It will include a chamber for growing plants; a food-processing module for extracting the maximum edible content from all plant parts; and waste management modules for capturing and recycling the solids, liquids and gases necessary to support life on a space journey.

In most of the manned Mars scenarios envisioned by NASA planners, the spacecraft would be constructed and fueled at a space station orbiting the earth at 17,500 m.p.h. Compared with blasting off from earth, considerably less fuel is needed to launch the craft from this speeding platform and boost it toward Mars at a velocity perhaps as great as 50,000 m.p.h. At that velocity, says Space Consultant and Author James Oberg, the "earth's gravity pulls on you a little, but it's like brushing your way through cobwebs." Following the path of the Hohmann ellipse,[1] the craft would coast in a leisurely course halfway around the sun, then begin to accelerate as it come under the gravitational sway of Mars.

[1] The Hohmann ellipse is an ideal trajectory requiring a minimum of energy for a journey between any two plants, named after the German engineer who calculated it in 1925.

To save fuel that would otherwise be used by firing retrorockets to ease the ship into orbit around Mars, the craft will be equipped with an aerobrake. This saucer-shaped structure, as large as 80 ft. in diameter, will slow the craft as it encounters the thin Martian atmosphere. A short burst from the rockets will then boost the craft just above the atmosphere and into orbit. From the orbiting craft, part of the crew will descend to the surface in a lander. After piling sand on the vehicle to shield it from the radiation that bombards the Martian surface, they will use the lander as a base for exploration.

How long the voyagers stay on Mars will depend in part on the homewardbound route. To await the proper alignment of Mars and the earth for an economical Hohmann-ellipse return, the crew would have to remain on Mars for more than a year—increasing the mission length to what now seems an unbearably long 1,100 days. But with the expenditure of more fuel, the explorers could blast off earlier, head toward Venus and loop around it, using the planet's gravity to whip their craft toward earth at a higher speed. That would cut the mission time to 600 to 700 days.

But the Venus route would also cause the craft to re-enter the earth's atmosphere at 80,000 m.p.h., in contrast to the returning Apollo's 25,000 m.p.h. "We're not sure we know how to build the appropriate heat shields," says Oberg. Also, at that speed, the astronauts would have a much smaller "window" for re-entering the atmosphere. "Come in too low, and you burn up," says Oberg. "Come in too high, and you overshoot. You miss the earth, and you'll never see it again." Other plans call for an unmanned cargo ship to precede the manned craft to Mars and for even higher velocities that would cut mission times down to a year.

Yet the problems of sending a spacecraft to Mars and bringing it back to earth pale when compared with the challenge of keeping its human cargo safe and in peak physical and mental condition. The medical consequences of long periods of weightlessness are still not fully understood. And radiation, says NASA's Michael Bungo, "is going to be a showstopper." Once beyond the earth's atmosphere and magnetic field, which protects terrestrial life from most lethal radiation, crew members would be vulnerable to cosmic rays. These highly energetic particles travel through space at close to the speed of light and can produce hazardous secondary radiation when they strike atoms in the aluminum walls of a spacecraft. During a single Mars mission, says Frank Sulzman, chief of NASA's space-medicine and biology branch, unprotected astronauts could receive an unacceptably high dose of radiation—more than is now allowed workers in a lifetime on jobs that expose them to radioactivity.

Even more dangerous are solar flares, which usually blossom on the sun around the peak of the eleven-year solar cycle. During these massive explosions, which astronomers can spot in the form of extra-bright splotches suddenly appearing on the sun, bursts of X rays and charged particles are hurled outward at high velocities. Because protons from a large flare can easily penetrate the walls of a spacecraft and fatally riddle the body of an astronaut in half an hour, planners envision an onboard shelter into which the crew could repair as soon as a solar-flare warning was sounded. One idea is to build the shelter with the heavy-walled oxygen and water tanks that must be brought along anyway. Soviet scientists are experimenting with generating strong electrically charged fields around the spacecraft. These would have an effect similar to that of the earth's magnetic field, deflecting the speeding particles around the ship.

Another possible hazard on a long space journey has its source on planet earth: human nature. Soviet flights have demonstrated that performance levels begin to decrease as the days stretch into months. Cosmonaut Yuri Romanenko, whose 326 days aboard the space station Mir set a space endurance record last year, was down to only two hours of productive work a day toward the end of his eleven-month flight and had become decidely peevish. "Leave me alone." he once snapped to mission control. "I have a lot of work to do."

Both American and Soviet behavioral scientists have begun to investigate small-group dynamics, which are likely to asume considerable significance during extended spaceflight. "There are always minor irritations involved in working with other people," says Psychologist Clay Foushee, of NASA's Ames Research Center. "Normally, these are not a problem because you can get up and move away. The trouble occurs when you can't leave a situation." That trouble can become catastrophic. Long Antarctic expeditions, which involve small groups isolated for months, have been marred by fights and occasional violence.

Other questions about group dynamics abound. Among the foremost: Should women be included on a Mars expedition? If so, what about sex? No one likes to talk publicly about that, admits NASA Flight Surgeon Patricia Santy. "There's no reason, even in a highly motivated professional crew, that the same kind of sexual tensions that develop here in offices aren't going to develop in space." Santy believes women should be included in the crew. If they are, she says, there should be at least two—both for mutual support and to avoid disruptive sexual entanglements aloft. Former Astronaut Micheal Collins has suggested an even simpler remedy: send up a crew of four married couples. "But eight is a bad number," he concedes, "because you want an off number; in arguments, you don't want to risk a 4-to-4 tie vote."

For all the enthusiastic talk about a manned mission to Mars, many influential voices have been raised against it. None is more formidable than that of University of Iowa Physicist James Van Allen, the discoverer in 1958 of the earth-girding radiation belts that today bear his name. With other scientists he has long been critical of the shuttle, the space station and other programs that draw funds away from space science. "Any serious talk of a manned Mars mission at this time is grossly inappropriate," he says arguing that the top priority of the U.S. should be to develop and build expendable rockets to launch satellites and space probes. "To talk about manned missions to Mars when we can't even launch a 500-lb. satellite is totally off the wall."

Van Allen believes a manned Mars mission would be "monstrously" expensive, further draining money from more economical unmanned scientific probes. The Mars mission does have a certain appeal, he concedes, because "it is a matter of high adventure. But if you want to put it on any practical basis, it's totally uncompetitive with unmanned spacecraft by a factor of ten."

The idea of a joint U.S.-Soviet Mars mission is galling to other Americans who, glasnost notwithstanding, simply do not trust the Soviets. Their view was summarized in a recent op-ed piece in the Los Angeles Times by Space Writer Alcestis Oberg, the wife of James Oberg. "A joint mission," she wrote, "completely and utterly ignores reality." Among the concerns raised by the proposed mission, she wrote, are the "potential for spying, for technology transfer, for interference in our political system, for the 'hostage holding' effect it would have on our space program and on our future." Her conclusion: "A complex, expensive, 25-year-long joint research program is like a marriage. It should be entered into soberly, advisedly for better or for worst—and only after a very long engagement during which trust is built and loyalty tested."

Even proponents believe the U.S. should approach a joint effort with the Soviets in gradual steps, perhaps starting with an unmanned mission to bring back soil samples from Mars in 1998. Many, like Sagan, are convinced that the advantages of a cooperative mission would override the possible risks. Besides sharply reducing the enormous costs of going to Mars alone, such a venture, says Sagan, "Would revitalize a dispirited and unraveling NASA" and provide a "coherent focus for the U.S. space program."

Even more important, in his view, a joint mission might help draw the U.S. and the Soviet Union closer together. He dismisses fears that such a mission would risk giving away U.S. technology to the Soviets, pointing out that the Soviets are a decade ahead of the U.S. in several areas of spaceflight. "Technology transfer," Sagan concludes, "is likely to flow both ways."

The rising sentiment in the U.S. to return to space and eventually send men to Mars has not escaped the attention of politicians, including presidential candidates. Says Democratic Contender Michael Dukakis: "We should explore with the Soviet Union and other nations the feasibility and practicality of joint space-engineering activities that might pave the way to a joint manned mission to Mars." In a Huntsville, Ala., speech, Vice President George Bush urged a "long-term commitment to manned and unmanned exploration of the solar system. There is much to be done—further exploration of the moon, a mission to Mars . . ."

If the U.S. is to mount or even play a meaningrul role in a manned Mars mission early in the 21st century, the next President will have to make a commitment to a coherent national space policy sooner rather than later. Enormous problems remain to be solved, and two decades is precious little time for developing a program that would land humans on another planet. The clock is running, and to NASA Ames Scientist Carol Stoker, the message from the Soviets is coming across loud and clear: "We're going to Mars, and the bus is leaving." And like her, more and more Americans are asking: Will the U.S. be aboard?

The Perils of Zero Gravity

As imposing as the problems of extended space flight seem, most experts are confident that humans can survive the journey to Mars. But in what shape will they be when they get there? Says NASA Physicist Wendell Mendell: "It doesn't do you much good to deliver a human to the Martian surface if that human is inert for a time after landing."

Despite the experience gained from Apollo moon shots and the longer Skylab missions, U.S. doctors have some doubts about the ability of humans to withstand the effects not only of prolonged weightlessness but also of the transitions from gravity on earth (one G) to zero G in space to 0.38 G on Mars. "We're nowhere near ready to send a human to Mars," says Dr. Michael Bungo, director of NASA's Space Biomedical Research Institute at the Johnson Space Center. "We've got years more of basic research to do."

Soviet space doctors seem more sanguine. While no American has stayed in space for more than three months, the Soviets have repeatedly staged manned flights of longer duration, capped by the 326-day stay of Cosmonaut Yuri Romanenko last year aboard the orbiting space station Mir. "The experience of that flight," says Dr. Arkadi Ushakov of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, "testifies that we should be optimistic about long-duration space flight. Our knowledge in the field of weightlessness is growing, and we are learning what counter-measures need to be taken to ensure health and safety."

Ushakov believes that two effects of prolonged weightlessness, calcium loss in bones and muscle atrophy, can be largely prevented by exercise. A strict regimen on a treadmill helped keep Romanenko's muscle tone and reduced the calcium loss to a degree that Ushakov calls insignificant. But other effects attributed to weightlessness are still cause for concern. "There is a general weakening of the immune system in a long-duration flight," Ushakov says. "When this happens, there is a danger that every microorganism present in the ship can cause infection."

The Soviets have also detected changes in metabolic rates, which they say accelerate arteriosclerosis. Then there is the problem of neuromuscular control. Cosmonauts returning to earth after long flights have had trouble performing simple tasks like throwing a ball. Arriving on Mars, space travelers might be unable to carry out assignments.

The solution, many scientists believe, is to impart artificial gravity—in the form of centrifugal force—to the spacecraft. This might be accomplished by spinning a very large craft around its own axis. Other schemes envision three ships hooked together in a cartwheel-like arrangement that makes three revolutions per minute, or two vehicles attached by a half-mile-long tether rotating through space as the entire system speeds toward Mars. Still another idea is to schedule a daily workout for each crew member inside an on-board centrifuge, where resisting the centrifugal force would simulate working in gravity.

Appolo 11 Astronaut Michael Collins forsees some technical difficulties in such simulation. "Spinning wouldn't take that much power," he says. "But it still complicates things immeasurably from an engineering point of view." He notes that imparting spin to a Mars-bound craft could make both navigation and communication more difficult.

Space Scientist Carol Stoker, at NASA's Ames Research Center in California, points out that there would be benefits of artifical gravity beyond the physiological ones. "Toilets would flush properly, things wouldn't float in the air, and just think of surgery in zero gravity," she muses. Malcolm Cohen, chief of the neuroscience branch at Ames, worries about the possible physiological effects of rotation. "Weightlessness is the devil we know," he says, "and we have some idea how to overcome its effects. But artifical gravity in space is a devil we don't know well." Still, he concludes, "it's certainly an option we can't reject."●

THE NEXT ERA OF HIGHWAYS

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, Federal Highway Administrator Robert Farris recently raised some timely observations and questions regarding the future of our highway programs:

> The era of the Interstate is ending. As the final gaps of this 42,000-mile system close around the Nation, a historic period in highway history is coming to a conclusion * * * it is time to look ahead to the next era of highway transportation * * * where do we go from here?

The future appears to have a high and a low road. The high road, as exemplified in the Interstate System, "discreetly balances the Federal interest on the one hand and proper State prerogatives on the other," the Highway Administrator points out.

We may, however, already be headed down the low road by degenerating our National System of Highways into a mish-mash of pork barrel projects for Members of Congress. The number of pork projects increased from 12 in 1982 to 150 in 1987, and in the 1992 highway bill, "we should not be surprised to see 535—one for each Member of Congress," warns Mr. Farris.

Mr. President, as Senators consider the future of highway programs, I think they will find Mr. Farris' clear thinking helpful. I ask that his article in Constructor magazine be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

HIGHWAYS: THE BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA

The era of the Interstate is ending. As the final gaps of this 42,000-mile system close around the nation, a historic period in highway history is coming to a conclusion. This magnificent Interstate Highway System, often called the single greatest public works project in the history of the world, is the result of more than 30 years of cooperative partnership between the federal government, the states, and private industry. It has also been a masterpiece of planning, foresight, and engineering ingenuity resulting from a national consensus about our country's transportation needs.

The vision of a nation unified by a vast highway system linking states and communities together came after years of debate about those needs and the resources that would be necessary to meet them. Now that this vision has been realized, it is time to look ahead to the next era of highway transportation. A new debate must be joined and we must encourage all Americans to contemplate some very important questions. Where do we go from here? What are the future transportation needs of the nation and how should they be prioritized? What resources are available to meet those needs? How should those resources be allocated? An important part of this debate will include an assessment of the proper federal role in any future highway program.

During the Interstate era, the federal role was one of strong leadership and aggressive management. In the coming era, I see that federal role evolving, with the private sector and local governments becoming more active players in many aspects of the highway program. I am particularly encouraged to see the private sector, through such forums as "Transportation 2020," taking a lead role in the debate about the future of this program.

There are three basic needs the highway program of the future must address:

We must maintain our existing system in the face of its inevitable aging.

We must do all that we can to improve the capacity of that system in the face of growing congestion.

We must provide for the extension of current "state-of-the-art" highways to those communities which are not now adequately served.

The debate about the new national agenda needs to include how these objectives will be met, the extent of the work to be done, and how it will be financed, given our limited resources.

One of my greatest concerns is how we resolve the important question of resource allocation. We must recognize that the answers to our very difficult future transportation problems do not lie in grandiose calls for more and more federal dollars.

Yes, we can easily document the need for more money in a host of areas ranging from pavement rehabilitation to bridge replacement to new highway facilities. Under certain optimistic scenarios we might even see some significant projects. I believe our traditional approach to apportioning federal dollars to the states in broad categories and reserving to them the responsibility of selecting projects has worked exceedingly well over the years. It is a method which discreetly balances the federal interest on the one hand and proper state prerogatives on the other. I believe we should change this approach only after the most careful consideration, and only after we can assure ourselves that whatever we might replace it with is an improvement for all of the interests involved.

It is unfortunate that such a careful consideration has not accompanied the trend of recent years, in which Congress has begun to incrementally assert itself in the project selection business. Prior to this decade—and contrary to popular belief—federal highway legislation was largely devoid of specific project designations. The 1982 Act included approximately a dozen so-called "demonstration projects." The 1987 Act contained over 150 such projects. Unless constrained by the kind of consensus on resource allocation of which I am speaking, we should not be surprised to see 535 projects (one for each member of Congress) listed in the 1992 Act. I am convinced that this trend needs to be high on our agenda as the debate over the future direction of this program goes forward.

I believe it is also important for us to recognize that the Highway Trust Fund has been a most effective and reliable funding mechanism. This user-fee system has generated billions of dollars for the construction and rehabilitation of our nation's most important highways and bridges. The gasoline tax has proven to be a fair and equitable method of raising the resources necessary to meet our national goals in this highway program.

The Highway Trust Fund is scheduled to expire after 1993, and its renewal will be largely dependent upon the articulation of a clear and compelling purpose for its continued existence. We must also meet head-on the combined threats to which the Trust Fund has been subjected in recent years: the evasion of taxes and the diversion of funds to non-transportation purposes. Clearly, our work is cut out for us.

Looking ahead, my guess is that one thing will remain unchanged: We will continue to drive rubber-tired vehicles well into the 21st century, though the method of propulsion may be different. Superconductivity may be the breakthrough under which we will propel vehicles more efficiently in the future. However, I do not see us taking off in any "Buck Rogers"-type flying machines which will serve to make our roads and bridges obsolete. They, it seems, will be with us for a long, long time to come.

I also see a dispersal of the population across the country, as pressing demands on water and waste disposal push the population away from the cities. This will certainly mean there will be a need for roads and new corridors of access.

In conclusion, let me offer this challenge to the construction industry: Maintain high standards, perform quality work ever more efficiently, and, most importantly, do enter this debate over America's future. If America is going to be competitive in this new era, we need to do even better in the century ahead. We need your ideas and your expertise. Let us work together and find a transportation program for America that will preserve for future generations the freedom, mobility, and standard of living our children and their children deserve. ●

"UNREPEATABLE HISTORIC CHANCE" FOR POLAND

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, last month, for the second time this year, Poland was gripped by widespread strikes and worker unrest. Like the strikes in April and May, workers' demands in August revolved around two central issues: the legalization of Solidarity and the political gains which that implies; and wage increases to offset price hikes and a staggering 50-60 percent inflation rate.

The Polish Government managed to get through the April-May strikes intact, without having to resort to violence or make any major political concessions. But it did not resolve the issues which drove the workers to strike in the first place: the call for trade union pluralism and economic self-determination. Those issues came back to haunt the Government this past month.

If Polish officials are smart, they will have learned two important things from this year's strikes. First, the regime must come to grips with the fact that these problems cannot be swept under the rug. As one striking worker said, "In May, it took us 6 hours to shut [the factory] gates. This time it took us 1 hour and 15 minutes. The next time it will take a half-hour." Each time the authorities skirt the real issues, they run the risk of an escalation of violence—and the stakes involved—come the next, inevitable eruption of Polish workers' anger.

Second, the Government made the mistake in April and May of making promises it was not prepared to keep. Workers were promised two things: wage increases and freedom from prosecution for their strike activities. The latest strikes were triggered when the authorities went back on their word, failed to deliver the promised raises, and dismissed workers who had taken part in the strikes. The lesson for the Polish regime is this: Each time it fails to keep its promises, it diminishes its own credibility. This in turn only serves to radicalize the workers, who will demand more and more from the Government as evidence that it is, in fact, bargaining in good faith.

Talks between Lech Walesa and Minister of Interior Czeslaw Kiszczak this week were a positive step forward, one for which Poland has waited for 7 long years. I welcome and encourage the progress of such talks. As General Jaruzelski said recently, Poland now has an "unrepeatable historic chance" to extract itself from a cycle of crisis. History will condemn those who fritter away such an opportunity.●

TIES BETWEEN SOUTH AFRICA AND ISRAEL

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently, Newsweek magazine had an article about South Africa's defense capabilities and in the article it had this sentence: "South Africa and Israel had a close relationship a decade ago; there is evidence that they maintain covert ties today."

After that appeared in Newsweek, I sent a letter to the Honorable Moshe Arad, the Ambassador of Israel to the United States, in which I said:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, May 5, 1988.

His Excellency MOSHE ARAD,
Ambassador of Israel,
Embassy of Israel,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: I'm enclosing a page from Newsweek magazine where I have circled one small item.

I'm a strong supporter of Israel, and I shall continue to be.

But I believe that any ties between Israel and South Africa are ultimately not in Israel's best interest nor in the best interest of stability in that region of the world.

I'm not making any public statement on this and I shall not, but I hope you will convey my concern to Jerusalem.

Cordially,

PAUL SIMON,
U.S. Senator.

TOP GUN: PRETORIA'S INTIMIDATING ARTILLERY

"At 20 miles, you can hit a fly on the wall with one of these—and take out the whole house," says the South African army lieutenant. In recent months Pretoria began using an intimidating new gun in Angola: the G-6, a wheeled, self-propelled artillery system. The mobile 46-ton gun can accurately fire at ranges up to 25 miles—six miles farther than NATO's 155-mm guns. The G-6 and its towable predecessor, the G-5, could not themselves tip the balance in Angola. But for "shoot and scoot," high-mobility warfare, says one Western expert, the G-6 "is very deliberately designed to outgun anything else around."

U.S. defense officials worry about South Africa's possible plans to market the G-6. Pretoria has reportedly sold the G-5 to Iraq and Iran. When South African forces began pulling out of Angola, intelligence sources say, they left a battery of G-5s with their partner, UNITA.

South Africa has not developed the G-6 by itself. "It's pretty clear they've had some outside assistance and the finger points to Tel Aviv," says one Washington arms expert. South Africa and Israel had a close relationship a decade ago; there is evidence that they maintain covert ties today. But the key G-6 technology was invented by a Canadian working for the U.S. government. The mystery now is: who authorized passing that data to Pretoria?

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I think it is important that my colleagues see the answer. At this point, I ask that Ambassador Arad's response be printed in the RECORD.

The letter follows:

EMBASSY OF ISRAEL,
Washington, DC, May 20, 1988.

Hon. PAUL SIMON
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SIMON: Thank you for your letter of May 5, enclosing a clipping from Newsweek of May 2, alleging possible ties between Israel and South Africa.

As you probably know, Israel has since its inception been forthright in its unqualified condemnation of the policy of apartheid in South Africa, and last year gave practical expression to its position by joining the relatively small group of countries which have imposed sanctions on South Africa. In a resolution adopted by the Cabinet on 18.3.1987, the Government decided to refrain from new undertakings between Israel and South Africa in the realm of defence.

If you should so wish, I would be happy to discuss this and other topics with you at your convenience.

Sincerely,

MOSHE ARAD,
Ambassador.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, what is significant is that Israel is one of the few nations that is imposing sanctions on South Africa, and is providing leadership and is seeking to push South Africa away from the sins of apartheid, which really do make for a grim future for South Africa.

Let me add, in South Africa today there are approximately 105,000 Jews out of a total population of 33 million.

The Jewish community, as well as any community in South Africa, has taken a strong stand against apartheid.

Since there is some misinformation going around about Israel's ties to South Africa, I thought it was important to set the record straight. I commend Israel for leadership in this matter, and I hope the United States will provide more leadership.●

CHANGE UP FOR CHANNEL ONE

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, Channel One, Inc., has been a leader in food assistance efforts in southeastern Minnesota. The Channel One Food Bank serves 12 counties in southeastern Minnesota and parts of Iowa and Wisconsin. Channel One also provides several programs for the residents of Olmsted County, including a senior citizen co-op, an emergency food shelf, a supplemental food shelf, and a green garden program. Furthermore, Channel One is one of two Commodity Supplemental Food Programs [CSFP] sites that just began operating in Minnesota this year. CSFP is similar to the WIC Program and provides low-income women and children with a package of foods such as infant formula, cereal, juice, and canned fruits and vegetables.

Barlow Foods in Rochester, MN, has recently initiated a unique program to raise funds for Channel One. I am impressed with the Barlow Foods management which approached Channel One with this plan to benefit the hungry in southeastern Minnesota. Under this program, called "Change Up for Channel One," customers may donate their change to Channel One when they purchase groceries at Barlow's. The customer receives the grocery tape which indicates their donation to Channel One. Barlow's will keep track of the amount donated and maintain a special account for Channel One. In turn, Channel One will use these funds to purchase products from Barlow's at a discount. Barlow's will also seek local corporations to match the donations 1 week per month.

The first week of the program was an impressive success. Beginning on July 25, in the first week alone shoppers donated over $1,300. Channel One is delighted with the new program, which will provide them with fresh produce, meat, and dairy products for their food shelf clients. I commend Barlow's for initiating this very important program to benefit Channel One and to assist in the continuing fight against hunger in southeastern Minnesota.

I ask that an article from the Rochester Post-Bulletin, which further describes "Change Up for Channel One," be printed in the RECORD.

NEW PROGRAM BENEFITS CHANNEL ONE

(By Aleta Capelle)

A new program that could raise tens of thousands of dollars for the benefit of Channel One was announced today by Stephen Barlow during a press conference at Barlow Foods, sponsor of the program.

Called "Change Up for Channel One," the year-round program is designed to provide perishable products needed by Olmsted County's hungry, said Barlow, vice-president of Barlow Foods.

Barlow customers will have the opportunity to "change up," to the nearest dime, dollar or any amount they wish when shopping at Barlow Foods, he said.

For example, a shopper with a grocery bill of $21.67 could ask the cashier to increase the bill to $21.70, $21.75 or $22, thereby donating 3 cents, 8 cents or 33 cents to Channel One.

Customers will receive a receipt tape that identifies the donation for their records and the money will be credited to Channel One's open account.

Channel One then has full use of the account to purchase products carried by or accessible to Barlow Foods, discounted to eliminate profit to the store, Barlow said.

Barlow Foods will administrate the account and Channel One can use its buying network to provide the desired product.

In addition, corporate sponsors are being asked to support the program.

Once a month, a corporate sponsor will match the total weekly donations collected on behalf of Channel One. Four sponsors have already been found, Barlow said. They are First Bank Rochester, which will match donations this week, Marigold Dairy, the Kahler Corporation and a sponsor who wished to remain anonymous.

Barlow said it is difficult to predict how many people will participate in the program or how much money will be raised until the program is in operation.

"I think we're talking a substantial amount of money," he said. If cooperation is strong, the amount over a year's time could be "well into the tens of thousands of dollars," he said.

Barlow said customers have made generous donations in the past three years, during the Channel One and Barlow Foods Thanksgiving Food Drives, but that is not enough.

"The food drives themselves are not going to solve the problem of the hungry in Olmsted County," he said. "Please, use your change to make a change," he said.

Marge Allen, executive director of Channel One, said dwindling government commodity surpluses have created a greater need at the food shelf for perishable products such as milk and cheese.●

CHILDREN'S INN AT NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH

● Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to recognize an important event which took place recently and which will have great significance for many American families. On July 29, ground was broken for the Children's Inn, a facility that will provide housing for families with seriously ill children at the Magnuson Clinical Center of the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, MD.

Each year, 8,000 young children and teenagers are treated at the Magnuson Center. Often, their families must stay for weeks at a time and return for outpatient visits. They deserve decent accommodations while their sons and daughters undergo treatment for rare and difficult-to-treat diseases. Other children, suffering from cancer or genetic problems, often must spend months at NIH with the skilled researchers. The majority of the patients at the Magnuson Center do not reside in the Washington, DC, area and their families are already forced to bear the burden of high travel costs.

I also want to recognize the involvement of the private sector in this important project. The Merck Co., for example, has generously donated $2.3 million to construct the inn, and I salute their efforts. Thanks to Merck and other private donors, there will soon be a place for as many as 36 families to stay on the NIH campus without significant expenses to the Federal Government aside from the donation of land.

This project is not one ruled by partisan politics. I, along with my wife, Elaine, and nearly three dozen Members of Congress and their spouses, serve on the honorary advisory board of the Children's Inn. I am pleased to be a part of this worthy program and, once again, wish to express my heartfelt appreciation to both the private donors and Merck on this noteworthy occasion.●

YAKIMA ENHANCEMENT PROJECT

● Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion that it is not possible at this time to reach a consensus on legislation to authorize the Yakima Enhancement project. So with great reluctance I have decided to forgo any further attempts to pass legislation this Congress to settle water claims in the Yakima River basin. I am convinced that every effort has been made given the climate that currently exists to resolve the competing claims to water in the Yakima basin. Unfortunately the parties were not ready or willing to settle their differences.

It now appears that the competing claims to water in the Yakima River basin will be left for the courts to resolve. The first premise of Western water law is that "first in time is first in right." Given the nature of water rights in our State, I doubt that the Yakima County Superior Court can effect an equitable distribution of water. Instead, the courthouse steps probably will resemble a bread line from an earlier era. The court will be forced to parcel out water rights. The first in line will have all they need; the last in line will have nothing if supplies run out.

In the adjudication, there will be winners and there will be losers. I don't think that anyone can be certain at present who will be in each category. In any event, it is important to remember that the Acquavella court is capable of resolving competing claims. With all due respect to the superior court judge handling the case, however, the court cannot provide a single drop of additional water. Judge Stauffacher will have no choice but to allocate the water supplies that currently exist among those whose collective needs are far in excess of currently available water supplies by providing for those who are first in line and denying the claims of those with more junior rights.

I am dismayed by the shortsightedness of those who see the current allocation of Yakima River water as a future they can rely on. They ignore the fact the maybe, just maybe, the Yakima tribe will be successful in the assertion of its claims. Unfortunately, the attitude of some non-Indians may result in the complete loss of water to their neighbors whose water rights are less secure.

Just as the Yakima project is operated in an integrated fashion, the economy of the Yakima Basin is an interrelated whole. All the Yakima water users are dependent on each other for a healthy, viable economy. If this controversy is left to the court to resolve, the economy of the entire region will suffer.

There are many whose efforts brought us very close to agreement. Congressman Sid Morrison has valiantly tried to bring the affected parties together. The study team of experts from the Washignton Department of Ecology and the Bureau of Reclamation deserve medals for their untiring efforts. Those who served voluntarily on our Policy Study Team performed in the best tradition of citizen involvement. I also think the people of the Yakima Indian Nation deserve special mention. Throughout this effort they have been willing to consider and accept compromise, and to consider the affect their position may have on other water users.

I am convinced that it is only a matter of time before the Yakima Indians are provided more water to meet their needs. Our Nation's highest courts have already ruled that the Yakima Indian Nation has a treaty right to water for the protection of salmon and steelhead runs. It is entirely plausible that the courts will also find that the Yakima Indian Nation has a treaty right to more irrigation water for use on the Yakima Indian Reservation. In my opinion the desires of the Yakima Indian Nation as expressed in this bill are modest in light of the claims the United States Justice Department will soon assert on their behalf.

In spite of the near certainty of Yakima tribal claims, the tribe has shown a willingness to compromise to avoid disrupting delivery of water to non-Indian irrigators. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for some irrigation districts who are motivated only to preserve their theoretical right to divert their 'entitlements', which incidentally are nothing more than the amount of water they agreed to divide among themselves back in 1945. Recently, the Federal courts decided that since the Yakima Indian Nation was not a party to the 1945 agreement, it had no effect upon the tribe's water rights. I am deeply disappointed by the lack of concern of some senior districts of the impact of this ruling and the effect this ruling may have upon their neighbors with junior water rights.

I caution those with senior water rights not to rely too heavily on the status quo. The second premise of Western water law is that water must be put to beneficial use in order to preserve the right to divert it. I am convinced that there will come a time when those who are not using water with the utmost efficiency will lose their right to divert it. When they do, they will be forced to become more efficient, regardless of whether they receive any Federal financial assistance at all to do so.

In the very near future I will be introducing legislation which I believe represents a fair and reasonable compromise of the competing claims. The bill I intend to introduce is essentially a composite of the proposals made this week to the irrigation districts as our best effort to provide water supplies which satisfsty present and future needs. Many will be startled to see how far we have come, and how close we were to achieving a consensus. I am hopeful that someday the people of the Yakima Basin will decide to support this legislation, and that their representatives in Congress will be able to enact it into law."●

ORDERS FOR MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1988

RECESS UNTIL 3 P.M.

Mr BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 3 o'clock p.m. on Monday, next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Daschle). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the two leaders have been recognized under the standing order, there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 3:30 p.m. and that Senators may speak during that period for morning business for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on Monday next there will be no rollcall votes prior to the hour of 6 o'clock p.m. in observance of the Jewish religious holiday. I anticipate that the conference report on the Labor-HHS appropriations bill would be before the Senate on Monday. It may very well be that no rollcall vote would be required on the adoption of that conference report. But if a rollcall vote is required on the adoption of the conference report or on any other matter, such rollcall vote will not occur prior to the hour of 6 o'clock p.m. So there may be rollcall votes on Monday.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1988. AT 3 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until 3 o'clock on Monday, September 12.

Thereupon, at 3:26 p.m., the Senate recessed until Monday, September 12, 1988, at 3 p.m.

☐ 1023

So the Journal was approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

(Mrs. ROUKEMA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, yesterday on rollcall No. 295, the conference report on Interior appropriations for fiscal year 1989, I was unavoidably detained from the House floor.

Had I been here, I would have cast a "yes" vote. The conference report represents responsible public lands planning for the Nation and, in particular, for the Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area in my district.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 1270. An act to award a congressional medal to Mrs. Jesse Owens, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2701. An act to amend the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 to remove certain

H.R. 5143. An act to waive the period of congressional review for certain District of Columbia acts authorizing the issuance of revenue bonds; and

H.J. Res. 453. Joint resolution designating September 16, 1988, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day."

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the motion to discharge on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Foley] to lay on the table the motion offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Kyl].

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. KYL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

□ 1043

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Leland for, with Mrs. Martin of Illinois against.

Mr. Jones of North Carolina for, with Mr. Roth against.

Mr. Towns for, with Mr. Boulter against.

So the motion to lay the motion on the table was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted "no".

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I unavoidably missed rollcall No. 301, on the Lungren amendment, limiting the fourth amendment exclusionary rule to allow a good faith exception for law enforcement officers. The amendment passed 254-132. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBERS OF DELEGATION TO ATTEND CONFERENCE OF THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION IN SOFIA, BULGARIA

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of 22 U.S.C. 276A-1 the Chair appoints to the delegation to attend the Conference of the Interparliamentary Union, to be held in Sofia, Bulgaria, on September 19 through September 24, 1988, the following Members on the part of the House: Messrs: Pepper of Florida, chairman; Hamilton of Indiana, vice chairman; Brown of California; Scheuer of New York; Latta of Ohio; Wortley of New York; and Blaz of Guam.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to Members seeking recognition for 1-minute speeches today that given the two votes already conducted, and the lapse of time and the fact that we intend to finish business today at 3 o'clock, and that there are several matters, including a conference committee report, to be approved and a bill relating to the strike in the Midwest having to be attended to prior to completion of business today, the Chair would like to confine 1-minute speeches prior to legislative business today to eight on each side.

NATIONAL TRAGEDY

(Mr. de la GARZA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. de la GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the membership that may not be acquainted with the fact that the House and Senate last night approved legislation to assist in the firefighting efforts in the Northwest that this is a national tragedy.

Mr. Speaker, we are seeing the splendor of those forests and stands of pine that are being burned that will not be seen again for two or three generations. We would like the American people to know that we in the Congress care, that we are concerned, and this legislation in part will assist in the endeavor at this time to try and suppress the fires.

ACID RAIN

(Mr. RAVENEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RAVENEL. Mr. Speaker, one morning a couple of weeks ago I was shook by newspaper headlines reading, "South Carolina Rain Among Most Acid." During the month of July the Ph of South Carolina's rainfall averaged less than 4. This means that our typical rainfall for the month was more than 50 times as acidic as normal. Neither my State nor our country can continue to survive the devastation wrought by this insidious enemy. Once bountiful streams and lakes are now devoid of life, lush mountain forests have been devastated, and human health is being compromised every day. By signing the Vento-Green letter on acid rain, our good friend, Floyd Spence, recently made South Carolina's condemnation of this tragic situation unanimous. Our Energy and Commerce Committee must realize that America cannot endure another year of congressional inaction on acid rain. Come on Energy and Commerce, report out H.R. 2666.

MRS. AQUINO WORE YELLOW ROSES, TODAY WE WEAR RED FACES

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, 2 years ago Corazon Aquino came to Washington. She needed money. She wore yellow. Most of the Members of the House wore yellow. When it was all over, she got an additional $100 million, even though she had already gotten half a billion dollars that year.

I warned back then, and I was in the minority, that we should get some commitment before giving any more money.

Congress said, "Don't worry."

Now those bases seem to be at stake. We have offered to double our current aid. The lady in yellow simply said, "No way." She wants triple the amount.

Two years ago we wore yellow roses. Today we wear red faces.

Mr. Speaker, we need those bases, but this is not aid. This is ransom, and all the yellow has turned to blackmail.

I think it is time that Congress ends the honeymoon with Corazon Aquino and treats her just like everyone else.

THE PROLIFERATION OF "SPEED" LABS

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that our efforts in crafting this drug bill will pay long-term benefits in moving us toward a drug-free society. The goal is to provide the tools necessary to shut down illicit drug dealers, discourage users, and rehabilitate offenders.

One issue I am particularly concerned with is the proliferation of so-called speed labs. My own State of Texas last year ranked second in the number of seizures of these clandestine drug factories.

We must not ignore the fact that methamphetamine, or speed, is being manufactured literally in our own back yards.

This year's drug bill will establish new requirements for reporting sales of the more than 20 chemicals used in concocting speed—but only when they are sold in large quantities.

I have proposed an amendment to close this loophole. My amendment would make it a crime to intentionally buy or sell smaller amounts of these chemicals in order to avoid the new reporting and recordkeeping requirements.

THE COURAGEOUS FIREFIGHTERS OF THE PARK SERVICE AND THE FOREST SERVICE

(Mr. WILLIAMS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I represent that area in Yellowstone National Park where the fires are threatening the cities of West Yellowstone, Cook City, and Silvergate. There is now 1 million acres in the Yellowstone ecosystem that have been burned. Another fire has started in the northern part of the district which I represent in Glacier National Park. That fire, too, has now begun to get away from the firefighters.

It is an anguishing thing to see the fires in two of America's great national parks. It is, of course, a great tragedy; and yes, the fairly reasonable Forest Service and Park Service policy of contained fires does need reappraisal and reevaluation by the Congress and by the American people. However, I encourage my colleagues in both the House and the Senate to avoid accusatory rhetoric toward the Park Service and the Forest Service, to refrain from demagoguery.

There is no more courageous, effective or knowledgeable firefighter, in an election year, than a Member of Congress 2,200 miles away from the flames. It is like fighting the Vietnam war from Indiana.

ATROCITIES OF THE SANDINISTA GOVERNMENT

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of my colleagues the latest report on the atrocities of the Sandinista government in Nicaragua. Today, the Washington Post reports that Americas Watch, a human rights organization, certainly not known as a Reagan administration supporter, has accused the Sandinista militia of a series of murders of suspected Contra collaborators. Americas Watch has stated that these findings are numerous enough to "suggest tolerance or complicity by higher authorities" in the Sandinista government.

I would also like to draw to the attention of my colleagues to the timing of many of these murders. During talks in Sapoa in March between Contra and Sandinista leaders, a "platoon" of Sandinista soldiers arrested five lay leaders of the Catholic Church, mutilated and partially burned their bodies. They also remembered to remove two gold fillings from one of their victims. Who else have these cowards chosen as victims? Socorro Mejia, a mentally handicapped farmer, Cruz Castillo, a withered farmer who suffered from a birth defect, and 12-year-old Pablo Manzanarez. I wonder Mr. Speaker, did these people pose such a serious threat to the Sandinista revolution?

Why such barbarous behavior during so-called peace negotiations? I believe the reason is clear. The Sandinistas do not want peace, or democracy or human rights, they want power. While they talk about shared political power, they are aware of and apparently tolerate these brutal acts aimed at crushing the will of those in Nicaragua who wish to be free.

RUNWAY DISTANCE MARKERS COULD SAVE LIVES

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I was recently alerted to the fact that very few commercial airports have distance-to-go markers on their runways and that such markers are not required by the FAA. These markers let pilots know how many thousands of feet are remaining to the end of the runway, and help pilots judge the efficiency of their takeoff roll. Through conversations with a number of commercial pilots, I have come to the conclusion that such markers could have helped avert or at least lessened the likelihood of the recent Delta Airlines accident at the Dallas-Fort Worth Airport, which did not have these markers. Perhaps if the pilot had known he had used an extraordinary amount of runway without achieving adequate speed, he would have stopped the takeoff attempt and many lives would have been saved. In recent years, Congress has urged the FAA to accelerate the placement of distance to go markers at commercial airports, but the FAA has not responded with deliberate speed.

Today I am sending a letter to FAA Administrator McArtor urging the FAA to require all airports which handle jet aircraft to install distance-to-go markers on their runways. These markers are already in use and required at military airports and airports jointly used by both military and civilian aircraft.

Mr. Speaker, how many more lives must be lost in air accidents which could be preventible? The American flying public should not have to wait for another tragedy to occur before we take this very simple step.

DUKAKIS EDUCATION LOAN PLAN FLAWED

(Mr. HENRY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, today's edition of the Washington Post indicates the education community's tepid reception of Governor Dukakis' proposed new student loan program. As the Post points out, questions have already surfaced as to the plan's feasibility and its fairness. Katherine Hanson, executive director of the Consortium on Financing Higher Education is stated to have questioned whether the program unwisely shifts responsibility from parents to their children. Bruce M. Carnes, Deputy Undersecretary at the Department of Education, rightly questions whether any knowledgeable student would want to commit to a plan without knowing what the true consumer cost of the student loan would be.

But there are other weaknesses in the Dukakis proposal, as well. This is particularly true when compared with a much simpler and direct form of relief to middle-income households proposed by Vice President BUSH, namely the College Savings Bond Act which I and many other Members of Congress from both sides of the aisle have introduced.

College savings bonds encouraging saving and capital formation. The Dukakis proposal is but yet another attempt to shift the costs of current consumption onto the next generation. The college savings bond proposal encourages colleges and universities to remain cognizant of market-cost impacts. The Dukakis proposal releases inflationary pressures in the education marketplace since costs of education are subsequently tied to graduate earnings as opposed to actual marketplace cost.

The college savings bond proposal guarantees ownership of savings investments toward college education on a fixed return basis. The Dukakis proposal is a "pig in the poke," a blind lottery-type speculation as to whether or not it is, indeed, a wise investment from a strictly economic point of view.

The college savings bond proposal encourages savings so as to avoid indebtedness. The Dukakis proposal encourages and promotes indebtedness.

The college savings bond proposal creates no new paperwork, no new bureaucracy, no political debates on income redistribution. It rewards and encourages those very disciplines by which a free society prospers. The Dukakis proposal creates the spectrum of encumbered management, paperwork, political intervention, and reformulation.

The college savings bond proposal enjoys a broad and bipartisan range of support. Since I first introduced the proposal in the House, similar proposals have been introduced and advocated by the Democratic leadership as well. One can only speculate why Governor Dukakis has veered away from a much simpler, workable college savings bond proposal which already enjoys a high degree of support, and instead has only clouded the waters and perhaps inadvertently delayed implementation of reforms which promise to open the doors of opportunity for the next generation of Americans.

IS MR. QUAYLE PLAYING FAIR?

(Ms. OAKAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, speaking of education, it seems that those who are privileged in our great Nation have forgotten or perhaps never understood what it means to play fair to succeed.

In an article in the Plain Dealer, my hometown paper, we find that the candidate for Vice President from Indiana, Mr. QUAYLE, now aspires to lead us in the second highest office in our land, entered law school in 1970 through a program intended to offer equal opportunity to minorities and the disadvantaged.

The director of the program says that the goal of the program was designed to help the very disadvantaged students.

I find it supremely ironic that while taking up a minority slot for the disadvantaged, Mr. QUAYLE has supported reductions of continuous student loans for our young people, opposed the Civil Rights Restoration Act, an act to provide equal access for education to women and minorities in particular, and ironically opposed a similar program that was a precursor of the program of which he found a loophole—a program for the disadvantaged.

Mr. Speaker, this is the man who wants to be a heartbeat away from the President of the United States.

CONGRESS SHOULD SET PUBLIC EXAMPLE BY RECITING PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

(Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, each day all across our Nation in schools, at sporting events, at civic functions and even in State legislatures, we pause for a moment to pay tribute to the flag. And I've often wondered why we do not recite the pledge here in the House.

All too often, we in Congress are criticized because we pass laws and mandates that we are unwilling to abide by ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is about time that we set a good public example of our love and patriotism for our great Nation by reciting the Pledge of Allegiance each morning in this Chamber. After all, the House Chaplain leads us in a spoken prayer each morning. Why not the Pledge of Allegiance? Would it not be nice to adopt this wonderful tradition during the 100th Congress in celebration of 200 years of freedom and democracy?

EXPRESSING SADNESS ON THE DEATH OF OTTO PASSMAN, FORMER MEMBER

(Mrs. BOGGS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness that I mark the news of the death of our former colleague, Otto Passman of Louisiana.

Following distinguished service as a naval officer in World War II, Otto was elected to this House in November of 1946 and served here for 28 years, 22 of which he served as the chairman of the Foreign Operations Committee of Appropriations. In that capacity, he traveled the length and breadth of this globe making certain that the U.S. taxpayers' moneys were properly spent in our foreign operations abroad.

It is with great sadness that we mark his death, and we extend to his family our deepest sympathy.

TOO MUCH RHETORIC ON THE PART OF CONSUMER GROUPS

(Mr. ROBERTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I warned my colleagues that well-meaning but obviously misguided consumer groups were actually recommending farm program changes that could undermine the long-overdue recovery we are having in farm country.

Using this summer's drought as some kind of a justification they have chosen to play Chicken Little, warning that we may actually run out of grain. Not to worry, America's consumers, we have a steady, reliable supply of 666 million bushels, and that is 9.7 billion loaves of bread above what was normally consumed. That means 160 extra loaves of bread for every family of four in this country.

Skyrocketing prices? If you pass that cost on, the recent price increase at the local elevator is about a dollar, and goodness knows we have needed it all of this time, and that means that an average family of four who consumes two loaves of bread per week is going to pay $1.46 for the entire year. Too much to pay for the farm recovery? No. Too little grain? No. Too much rhetoric on the part of some Chicken Little consumer groups? Yes.

POVERTY DATA

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, Vice President BUSH says that all is well in today's economy. His prescription for the future is simple—more of the same. However, recent census data clearly supports what Gov. Michael Dukakis has been telling the American people—that despite 5 years of economic recovery, many Americans are still being left behind.

Is Mr. BUSH really satisfied when 46 percent of all black children and 40 percent of all Hispanic children live in poverty? More than one in every five children in America is poor. Should we be satisfied with this type of economic performance? No, Mr. Speaker, we should be ashamed. Economic growth alone cannot solve the problem of poverty alone. The last 8 years make this abundantly clear.

It is disturbing that we have heard nothing from Vice President BUSH about how he would alleviate the suffering of the growing numbers of poor children. After playing the good soldier for 8 years as President Reagan cut the programs which lifted so many of these families out of poverty and gave them hope for the future, Mr. BUSH now has the opportunity to tell us what he thinks. Mr. Speaker, the silence is deafening.

THE FAILURE OF THE DUKAKIS FURLOUGH

(Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DONALD E. "BUZ" LUKENS. Mr. Speaker, the furlough program of Mike Dukakis in Massachusetts has set the example of the country's most dangerous prisoner release program in modern history. Dukakis' failed policies have cost people their lives—as in the Willie Horton case.

Dukakis fought to continue the furlough program for first degree murderers even after the people of Massachusetts mobilized to change the law. This reckless disregard for victim's rights and community safety is inexcusable.

On average, a first degree murderer was let out on furlough each day for the past seven years. (Lawrence, MA, Eagle-Tribune, December 30, 1987.)

I would like to place in the RECORD the following articles and facts about the Massachusetts furlough program:

FURLOUGHS—JUNE 29, 1988 (REVISED)

Michael Dukakis has actively supported the Massachusetts furlough program since it was enacted in 1972.

Until the law was changed in April 1988, Massachusetts was the only state to permit furloughs for first-degree murderers serving life sentences without parole.

In other states which permit furloughs for first-degree murderers, the furloughs are granted after the inmate is deemed eligible for parole, not before. In Massachusetts, the situation was reversed.

"On average, a first degree murderer was let out on furlough each day for the past seven years." (Lawrence, Mass., Eagle-Tribune, December 30, 1987.)

Presently there are 80 prisoners who are missing from pre-release centers, furloughs, and work-release programs. 62 of these escaped under Dukakis Administrations.

These escapees include 58 violent criminals: including 10 murderers, 9 rapists, and 25 armed robbers. And 12 criminals were serving sentences for drug-related crimes, including 9 for distribution or intent to distribute.

Willie Horton committed his crime in Maryland—terrorizing a couple in their home, stabbing the man and raping the woman—on April 3, 1987, after escaping from Massachusetts during a June 1986 furlough.

Not until March 22, 1988—nearly a year later—did Gov. Dukakis reluctantly agree to sign a bill prohibiting furloughs for first-degree murderers.

Dukakis defended his system all through 1987: "Look, we're running a very tough, strong, well-defined furlough program in this state which by and large has been very successful." (July 7, 1987; quoted in Lawrence Eagle-Tribune, January 31, 1988.)

In fact, at the time Dukakis agreed to sign the bill, he was faced with both a hostile legislature and a potential referendum on furloughs on the November ballot—not something he would like voters to see at the same time he's running for President.

This is a state issue, but Vice President BUSH opposes furlough programs for first-degree murderers like Horton who are sentenced to life without parole and drug dealers.

Let's say what furlough programs really are—weekend passes and "get out of jail free" cards.

MASSACHUSETTS ESCAPEES CASE HISTORIES—JUNE 29, 1988 (REVISED)

Eighty prisoners remain at large having escaped from Massachusetts pre-release centers, furloughs, work release, halfway houses, and prisons. (One was recently recaptured in Escondido, California, 3,000 miles away.) Sixty-two of these escaped during Dukakis Administrations. Here are some case histories of the prisoners, as reported in the Lawrence (Mass.) Eagle-Tribune, January 10, 1988.

Willie Horton

Horton was serving a sentence of life without the possibility of parole for first-degree murder. On his tenth furlough, in June 1986, he escaped. On April 3, 1987, he terrorized a Maryland couple in their home, stabbing the man and raping the woman. He was later apprehended and sentenced in Maryland to two consecutive life terms plus 85 years. Somewhat incredibly, Massachusetts requested his extradition. The judge, however, ruled that he should not be sent back to Massachusetts, where he could become eligible for furlough once again.

Brendan Boyd

Boyd was a convicted rapist who was also serving a life sentence for murdering a prison inmate. He was, however, released on furlough in 1986, during which he raped a woman in Mattapan and then shot himself to death.

Armand Therrien

Therrien was a former New Hampshire state trooper who shot a police officer and another man to death. He was permitted a work detail at a Worcester hospital which had been approved by a Massachusetts corrections commissioner and escaped.

Charles Costa

Costa was serving 3 to 5 years for the rape of a child by force in Everett. A career criminal, he had a record of burglary and escapes in other states, yet he was placed on work release from the South Middlesex Pre-Release Center, from which he escaped on February 27, 1987.

Michael D. Jones

Jones was serving 10-12 years for rape and armed robbery. He walked away from the Northeast Corrections Center, a pre-release center, in January 1983.

Eugenio Torres

Torres was convicted in 1986 for the unlawful possession of a controlled substance. A few months later, he was permitted work release from the Massachusetts Corrections Institution at Shirley, from which he escaped and stabbed his wife and another male at home.

Robert E. Jeffreys

Jeffreys had a criminal record including burglaries, drugs, assault with a dangerous weapon, and assault on a police officer. Nevertheless, he was permitted to take furloughs at his mother-in-law's home while serving 6-10 years for a 1980 armed robbery. He escaped from the Boston Pre-Release Center January 30, 1986.

THE HORTON CASE

The case of William Horton, Jr., spurred the public outcry and legislative initiatives which ultimately forced Dukakis to accept a ban on furloughs for first-degree murderers earlier this year.

November 1, 1974

During an armed robbery of a gas station, in Lawrence, Mass., Horton held at gunpoint a 17-year old gas station attendant, Joseph Fournier. After robbing the youth, Horton brutally stabbed him 19 times, and stuffed his body into a 30 gallon trash can.

For this crime, Horton was sentenced to life imprisonment, without the benefit of parole.

June 12, 1986

Horton escapes from Massachusetts while on a weekend pass from the state prison in Concord. Horton was on his tenth furlough when he escaped.

April 3, 1987

Horton breaks into the home of a Maryland couple, Clifford and Angela Barnes, and terrorizes them for 12 hours, During the night of terror, he tied Mr. Barnes up in the basement, stabbed him repeatedly and robbed him, and waited for Mrs. Barnes to return home. Upon her entrance, Horton dragged her upstairs and raped her twice. Eventually, the couple managed to escape. Panicked, Horton stole their car, and after a high-speed auto chase, was recaptured after being shot twice.

For this and other offenses Horton committed during the hours of terror, he was charged with 13 different crimes, including: 2 counts of kidnapping, 2 counts of false imprisonment, 5 counts of assault with intent to murder; 2 counts of first-degree rape, 2 counts of second-degree rape, 1 count of malicious cutting of a person, 1 count of possession of a firearm by a felon, 1 count of breaking and entering, 1 count of burglary, 2 counts of theft, 4 counts of discharge of loaded weapon to avoid arrest, and 1 count of possession of a firearm by a felon.

Horton was found guilty of these crimes in Maryland, and sentenced to two life terms plus 85 years. The sentencing judge, Vincent Femia, stated at the close of the trial, "With all due respect to the citizens of our sister state, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts * * * I'm not prepared to take the chance that Mr. Horton might again be furloughed or otherwise released * * * He [Horton] now belongs to the state of Maryland."

Horton committed his crimes on April 3, 1987. Not until March 22, 1988—nearly a year later—did Dukakis reluctantly agree to sign a bill prohibiting furloughs for first-degree murderers.

DUKAKIS ON FURLOUGHS

1976

After vetoing a bill to ban furloughs for first-degree murderers, Dukakis said: "This bill would have cut the heart out of efforts at inmate rehabilitation. With 98 percent of those committed to our institutions eventually returning to society, it is essential that we retain what has proven to be a successful tool for breaking the cycle of crime which our prison systems used to encourage." (Lawrence Eagle-Tribune.)

After the Horton case came to light, Dukakis continued to defend the program on a number of occasions:

June 7, 1987

"I am a supporter of the furlough program because I think it is an important part of any modern and any effective correctional system. There is always a risk and our job is to make that furlough program as strong and as well administered and as responsible as possible." (Lawrence Eagle-Tribune.)

June 30, 1987

"The furlough program over the past ten years has been quite successful and it's something I rely on very heavily when it comes to making decisions about commutations." (Lawrence Eagle-Tribune.)

July 7, 1987

"Look, we're running a very tough, strong, well-defined furlough program in this state which by and large has been very successful." (Lawrence Eagle-Tribune.)

November 23, 1987

"I * * * just don't like the idea of absolutely prohibiting the possibility of a furlough program in these cases. I don't see how a governor responsibly exercises his commutation power under these circumstances." (Lawrence Eagle-Tribune.)

December 17, 1987

January 6, 1988

"We recognize this is a serious problem of great concern to people and it is of great concern to me. We have brought all the lifers back into more secure settings. As a practical matter the furlough program for lifers is on hold." (quoted in Lawrence Eagle-Tribune, January 31, 1988.)

Eventually, though, Dukakis was faced with a legislature hostile on the issue and a citizens' initiative which was gathering signatures for a referendum on the furlough program for the November ballot—presumably not something he would like voters to see at the same time he ran for President. So he reluctantly agreed to sign a bill prohibiting furloughs for first-degree murderers.

"Dukakis announces that he will not oppose a ban on furloughs for killers: 'I try to listen, I try to learn. Ralph Waldo Emerson said that foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds. The fact of the matter is that the people of this commonwealth and the legislature * * * and my job as governor is to try to build and create the best correction system I can.' " (Washington Post, March 23, 1988.)

Mr. Speaker, Michael Dukakis' program of furloughs for murderers, rapists, and now his new furlough program for liars, such as John Sasso, further endangers truth as his other furlough endangers public safety.

UNITED STATES ON DANGEROUS CREDIT BINGE

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, the United States is on a dangerous credit binge. Our national public debt is now upward of $2.44 trillion. We owe nearly $288 billion of this debt to foreign creditors. The United States is borrowing more and more from abroad to pay for goods and services we insist on importing from abroad. The United States has a dire need for promoting domestic savings.

We have an excellent program in this country to provide domestic dollars for domestic investment—domestic dollars for domestic government expenditures. It is called the U.S. savings bonds program. Our citizens' purchases of savings bonds in the past year alone saved us $560,000 by reducing the cost of financing the national debt. Treasury estimates that the taxpayers save approximately $60 million for every $1 billion in savings bond sales.

I am sorry to report that this great program is in danger. The Treasury has embarked upon an experiment to streamline the sale of savings bonds by discontinuing their sale in banks and making them available only through mail or phone orders. My home State of Ohio was chosen for this pilot program. The citizens of Ohio can no longer walk into their local bank and walk out with a savings bond. They must fill out a form or place a phone order, and wait 3 weeks for the bond to be mailed to them. If bonds are bought as a gift they must be mailed directly to the person receiving the gift, for they are registered under that person's name, and there is no chance for the sender to enclose a card or any explanation of the gift. It has recently been brought to my attention that gift certificates are available in the banks, but my constituents want to give a gift, not a gift certificate. A mail order program is a beneficial supplement to the sale of bonds in our banks, but not a substitute for it.

I have received nothing but complaints about this pilot program. Last Christmas, several of my constituents missed sending their grandchildren savings bonds for the first time in years because of the new procedure. Many of my constituents now go to Michigan to buy their savings bonds from Michigan banks, rather than facing the cumbersome and inflexible mail order system. They are crying out that they should be encouraged, not discouraged, from buying savings bonds.

I oppose the Treasury's pilot program for mail order of U.S. savings bonds. It is not fair that my constituents must travel to another State to purchase a gift of a U.S. savings bond. I want to encourage all Americans to buy bonds. This means we must make bonds conveniently available to all Americans. I do not oppose a mail order program as a supplement to sales in our Nation's banks, but I firmly believe that banks have an important role to play in promoting sales of U.S. savings bonds. I ask the Treasury to closely revise its pilot program to promote the effect on sales of bonds. Let us not ruin a good Savings Bond program in the name of bureaucratic efficiency.

THE GASSING OF THE KURDS

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, Iraq has stooped to new lows in human rights by using mustard gas to strike down its Kurdish minority. Secretary of State Shultz has appropriately informed the Iraqis that the continued use of these weapons and the other human rights violations will come at the expense of improved United States-Iraqi relations.

This latest Iraqi chemical atrocity is a symptom of a much larger problem. Today, at least 15 nations, including Iran, Libya, Iraq, Syria, and North Korea, have obtained chemical weapons. Apparently, many nations of the world have forgotten the horrors of mustard phosgens and chlorine gas used in World War I. It is imperative that the international community takes steps to stop the proliferation of these weapons.

IKE SKELTON and I introduced H.R. 2880, to establish a new U.S. chemical and biological weapons nonproliferation regime to help direct attention to the importance of controlling the spread of these weapons. I urge Members to cosponsor this legislation.

In the meantime we must ensure that countries like Iraq which use these illegal weapons face the full weight of international condemnation—and, if necessary, isolation.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—RECITATION OF THE PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE EACH LEGISLATIVE DAY IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privileges of the House, and I offer a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. —

Whereas many educational, athletic, and social events, as well as numerous legislative bodies, are convened with a formal recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag;

Whereas Members of the House are not presently afforded the opportunity to formally salute the Nation's Flag through a recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag at the commencement of each legislative day; and

Whereas such recitation would enhance the dignity and integrity of the proceedings of the House: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker or his designee shall lead the House in the recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag each legislative day immediately after calling the Members to order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the resolution and believes that it would change the rules of the House. Therefore under the precedents of the House it is not in order under the guise of a question of the privileges of the House.

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 226, nays 168, not voting 38, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report and the amendments in disagreement on the bill, H.R. 4783.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report which we present to the House today provides 1989 appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and for 20 related agencies. There were 256 Senate amendments in conference. We have resolved 255 of these differences with agreements which we believe are acceptable to the House and Senate and to the President. We have one amendment in true disagreement and that relates to the issue of Federal funding for abortions.

Mr. Speaker, let me again state that it is a distinct honor and a privilege to work on this bill with my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, SILVIO CONTE. Mr. CONTE is the ranking minority member on our subcommittee, as well as being the ranking minority member on the full Appropriations Committee. He has played a vital role in getting this conference report to the floor today. At this time I want to, personally, thank him for his efforts with respect to this bill and the programs which it funds.

Mr. Speaker, I would especially like to extend my gratitude to our distinguished full committee chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi, JAMIE WHITTEN, the dean of the Congress. Mr. WHITTEN has helped us, as he always does, in getting this bill through the House and through conference.

Finally, I would like to thank each of the other members of our subcommittee, all of whom have participated in our successful effort to bring this conference report to the House floor at this time.

Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement on H.R. 4783 that we are presenting to the House today provides a total of $140,374,129,000 for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services and Education and related agencies. This amount includes $6,462,681,000 for the Department of Labor, $111,147,857,000 for the Department of Health and Human Services, $21,724,362,000 for the Department of Education and $1,039,229,000 for related agencies. The conference agreement includes $101,051,519,000 for mandatory programs, principally Medicaid, Medicare, aid to families with dependent children, supplemental security income and guaranteed student loans, as well as $39,322,610,000 for discretionary programs where spending levels are set through the annual appropriations process.

The total funding recommended by the conferees for Labor, Health and Human Services and Education activities is $11,190,130,000 above the fiscal year 1988 appropriations. It is $1,773,065,000 over the President's budget, $4,579,437,000 over the House bill, and $55,112,000 under the Senate bill. Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that the large increase over the House bill is primarily the result of the inclusion in the bill of $3,242,600,000 for programs which were not considered at the time of House passage due to lack of authorizing legislation. Of the increase of $11,190,130,000 over fiscal year 1988, $9,536,332,000, or 85 percent is accounted for by entitlement programs over which the Appropriations Committee has no control.

Mr. Speaker, many of the Members may be concerned about how the conference compares to the subcommittee's current 302(b) ceiling under the fiscal year 1989 budget resolution. Let me assure Members that these totals are within our ceilings, both for budget authority and outlays. This is based upon new ceilings which reconcile differences between the original House and Senate 302(b) allocations at the midpoint. For discretionary programs the conference agreement is exactly at our ceiling for outlays and $264 million below for budget authority. Reaching agreement on these differences was very difficult. After resolving each of the individual amendments, the conferees were required to make a reduction of 1.2 percent in all discretionary programs in order to stay within our outlay target. This reduced outlays by $244 million.

We have one amendment in disagreement and that relates to the abortion issue. On this issue the House bill includes language identical to current law. This language allows for abortions only where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term. The Senate bill contains additional language allowing abortions for the victims of rape or incest, as well as other exceptions not permitted under current law. The President has indicated that he will veto the bill if this Senate language were to be agreed to. At the proper time I will offer a motion to insist on the House language in this matter.

H.R. 4783 includes funding for hundreds of separate programs in 3 Cabinet departments and 20 related agencies. Obviously, I cannot review each of the recommendations here today. Nevertheless, some of the more important ones include:

The sum of $1,223.7 million for AIDS research and prevention. This amount is $297.4 million over the fiscal year 1988 funding level, reaffirming the commitment of the Congress to eradicating this tragic disease as quickly as possible. Included in this amount is $607 million for research at the various institutes of the National Institutes of Health.

The sum of $7,152.2 million for biomedical research at the National Institutes of Health. This figure is $485.5 million over the fiscal year 1988 amount.

The sum of $1,383.2 million for low-income home energy assistance, an increase of $196.2 million over the budget request but a reduction of $148.6 million below fiscal year 1988.

The sum of $4.570.2 million for chapter 1 grants for the disadvantaged, an increase of $243.3 million over fiscal year 1988.

The sum of $5,814 million for student financial assistance, including $4,483.9 million for Pell grants. This will fund a maximum grant of $2,300.

Mr. Speaker, and important matter has come to our attention since the conference of this bill concerning the interpretation of section 124 of the Order Americans Act Amendments of 1987. We believe that the Department of Health and Human Services has incorrectly interpreted that section with respect to the question of locating area agencies on aging within an umbrella agency, such as a regional development commission or a planning and development district. The committee has already expressed itself on this matter in our committee report accompanying this bill (H. Rept. 100-689). I will quote part of that statement found on page 111 of that report:

> The committee believes that umbrella agencies such as regional development commissions, regional planning districts, and councils of government have been effective vehicles for the delivery of quality services to the elderly at the local level. The committee supports the statutory intent on this matter permitting the continued inclusion of area agencies within an umbrella agency, and believes that continuation of this existing service delivery system is fully consistent with the intent of the statute.

The Department is directed to revise its interpretation of this section to reflect congressional intent and to revise its regulations accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, we call the Department's attention to language included on pages 14 and 15 of the conference report to accompany the Treasury-Postal Service Appropriations Act for 1989 (H. Rept. 100-881). This concerns the matter of executive branch compliance with congressional intent as expressed in committee reports. I quote from page 15:

> Executive branch wishes cannot substitute for Congress' own statements as to the best evidence of congressional intentions—that is, the official reports of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, these are just some of the major items included in H.R. 4783 as agreed to in conference. The full agreement is described in the statement of the managers accompanying this conference report. Included in the conference report (H. Rept. 100-880 printed in part II of the RECORD of August 11, 1988), is a detailed table with appropriate comparisons. We believe that this is a good bill, a good compromise between the House and Senate, and a good compromise with the administration. We urge the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is the 5th of our 13 bills to come to the floor in its final form. Two more bills will go into conference today, and we appoint conferees on the remainder today.

The Members can take this as good news that the Appropriations Committee continues on its path of the best pace of bringing out individual appropriations bills in a quarter century.

I am personally gratified at the diligence of the committee and its exercise of responsibility and leadership in following up on the historic budget summit agreement last fall.

And I have indicated my readiness to roll up my sleeves and work night and day in the days ahead to produce conference agreements on all the remaining bills. Passing individual bills in broad daylight, as opposed to a gigantic continuing resolution passed in the dim of the night, is the right thing to do. This is how the process should work, and how the chairman of the full committee, the subcommittee chairmen and ranking Republican members and all the Members are making it work this year.

However, we must be aware of the constraints we face. The latest word from the Office of Management and Budget is that there is only a $400 million cushion before Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sequestration goes into effect. I am inserting that recent letter from OMB into the RECORD. That will cut a minimum of $10 billion across the board from all the programs we have worked so hard to reach the proper level of funding. Individual appropriations bills do impact on that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit calculation. The Treasury bill we passed Wednesday will subtract approximately $200 million; the Interior bill passed yesterday will add approximately $100 million. This Labor-HHS-Education bill will subtract approximately $12 million.

That speaks to the necessity of doing all that we can to hold our bills in line. Since we are playing Russian roulette with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, let's at least remove as many bullets from the chamber as we possibly can. We've done a great job up until now. Down the stretch, I just ask everyone to remember, now more than ever, a little restraint will go a long way.

OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 8, 1988.

Hon. SILVIO CONTE,
Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR SIL: As we approach the end of the fiscal year, I want to be as helpful as possible to you and your colleagues in order to make sure that we avoid a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings (G-R-H) sequester.

As you know, the G-R-H Report published on August 25th concluded that as of the August 15th snapshot the G-R-H deficit baseline was $144.0 billion—only $2.0 billion below the sequester level of $146.0 billion. As shown in the first table, subtracting from that figure the $0.6 billion excess over its G-R-H baseline level of the HUD/Independent Agencies Appropriations bill, $0.4 billion for the trade bill, and $0.3 billion for the emergency hunger relief bill, puts the deficit figure within $0.7 billion of a sequester.

In addition, the G-R-H law requires that final regulations be incorporated into the baseline estimates. As required by G-R-H, for certain Medicare regulations (only), the sequester report of August 25th included in the baseline the outlay estimate corresponding to the preliminary figures contained in an earlier Notice of Proposed Rulemaking. However, we have recently been advised that this and other final Medicare regulations—based largely on more recent data—will add some $0.2 billion to the baseline deficit. This means that as of the issuance of these final regulations, and after taking into account changes to debt service and the spendout adjustment for legislation signed after August 15th, we will be within $0.4 billion of a sequester.

With this in mind, I must stress the necessity of finding offsets for additional spending measures such as the drug bill. I must also stress the importance of conference action to restrain individual domestic appropriations bills, many of which exceed their G-R-H baselines (see table 2).

I realize that it will not be easy to find offsets or pare back domestic appropriations. But we cannot resort to expedients such as waiving scoring requirements that avoid budget discipline.

I look forward to working with you in order to conclude this year's legislation in a timely fashion and at levels that avoid a sequester.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES C. MILLER III,
Director.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join with my good friend and subcommittee chairman, BILL NATCHER of Kentucky, in bringing to the House floor the conference report on H.R. 4783, the fiscal year 1989 Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education appropriations bill.

After having had to include this bill in the omnibus continuing resolution for the past 2 years, I am pleased that once again the Labor, HHS, and Education bill has a good chance of becoming law on its own.

For 3 straight years prior to fiscal year 1987, BILL NATCHER and I, together with the other members of the subcommittee, sent the President bills providing for the human resource needs of the American people. Those bills exceeded the President's budget recommendations, because we heard directly from the American people that they needed more help from their Government.

The President recognized that, and signed those bills, and he has said that he will sign this one if we can work out the one item in disagreement.

The fact that the President will sign this bill is tribute to my friend, BILL NATCHER, who is without peer in the Congress in his compassion for the disadvantaged, sick, unemployed, young, and older Americans whose needs he understands and looks after. There isn't a better team in the entire Congress than BILL NATCHER and SIL CONTE.

The countless hours of effort that he has devoted to this bill will pay off when the President signs the bill—and the payoff will be to those American people in need.

Our full committee chairman, JAMIE WHITTEN, also has been most helpful in bringing us to this point, and I want to acknowledge that fact. I also want to salute the efforts of all the members of the subcommittee, particularly my friends on this side of the aisle—CARL PURSELL, JOHN PORTER, BILL YOUNG, and VIN WEBER.

The conference agreement that we are presenting today provides $140.3 billion in new budget authority—$139.2 billion for the current year—including $39.3 billion in discretionary funding and $99.8 billion in current year mandatory spending.

H.R. 4783 is $4.5 billion over the bill that the House passed in July, $3.2 billion of which is to provide funding for programs that were unauthorized when the House considered the bill, such as mental health research, job training, and health care for the homeless, health professions training, refugee assistance, and others.

But, despite the fact that we are over the original House bill, we are still under our 302(b) allocation for discretionary budget authority by $264 million and equal to our allocation for discretionary outlays.

As the chairman has stated, the conference agreement proposes an increase of $11.1 billion over the fiscal year 1988 level and $1.7 billion over the President's request. The priorities in the conference report remain the same as those proposed in the House bill and the President's budget—AIDS research, biomedical research, compensatory education for disadvantaged children, and student financial assistance.

For AIDS research and prevention, we provide $1.223 billion, $312 million more than the fiscal year 1988 level. This is slightly below the amount requested by the President because we had to apply an across-the-board reduction to all programs in our conference report in order to meet our new 302(b) allocation. The new 302(b) is the midpoint between the original House allocation and the Senate level which was $332 million below the House for discretionary budget authority. That caused reductions in all of the priority areas contained in the House bill.

The conference report provides increases for biomedical research of $346 million at the National Institutes of Health and $188 million at the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration. Significant increases are provided for the National Institutes of Mental Health where the conference report will fund major expansions in research into the neurosciencies, schizophrenia, and Alzheimer's disease.

Compensatory education will receive an increase of $242 million, for a total appropriation of $4.579 billion. These programs help to meet the special educational needs of disadvantaged young people by providing remedial instruction to improve their basic skills in reading and mathematics. Included in our appropriation are new initiatives for concentration grants, even start, capital expenses for nonpublic students, and rural education.

The bill also increases college student aid by $269 million, to a total of $5.814 billion—slightly below the administration's request—plus an additional $3.1 billion for guaranteed student loans. Without these programs, millions of young Americans would not have the opportunity to attend college.

I'd like to mention one other program contained in the conference report—low-income home energy assistance.

The conference agreement provides $1.383 billion, $196 million above the administration's request and the Senate amount, and $184 million below what was contained in the House bill. I wish we could have maintained at least the House level. Although the conference report reflects a reduction from last year's level and previous appropriations, we were able keep the cuts for this program from reaching the disastrous levels proposed by the administration and the Senate.

We have done our best to meet the human services needs of the American people while also facing up to the realities of our Federal budget deficit situation. This conference report reflects historic levels of spending for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education.

If we can resolve the one item in disagreement satisfactorily, this will be a great bill for the American people, and one which we can all be proud of. I urge adoption of the conference report.

Let me highlight the conference agreements for some of the other program areas that are of particular interest to me.

For the Labor Department, the conference report provides $6.462 billion, $190.6 million over the fiscal year 1988 level, and $318.7 million over the administration's request.

One of the most important activities of the Labor Department is administering the Job Training and Partnership Act, which we propose to fund at $3.728 billion. Included in that amount is $709 million for the Summer Youth Program, $283 million for dislocated workers, $68.5 million for migrants and seasonal farmworkers, $741.8 million for the Job Corps, and the Training, Job Search, and Relocation Program authorized by the Trade Act at a $47.8 million level. In addition, the conference report continues both the prohibition on closing any Job Corps centers and the policy begun last year to construct six new centers.

I am pleased that the conference agreement proposes a $12.5 million increase over the fiscal year 1988 level for title V, Community Service Employment for Older Americans, to cover expected minimum wage increases and to expand the number of jobs available. My amendment to expand funding for the Displaced Homemaker's Network within the Women's Bureau is contained in the conference agreement, together with funding for the permanent mass layoffs and plant closings survey conducted by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. For veterans' employment and training. I am pleased that the bill provides an increase of $17.8 million over the fiscal year 1988 level.

Under the Department of Health and Human Services, the conference agreement provides $1.2236 billion for AIDS activities throughout HHS. This amount is roughly $10 million less than the administration requested for AIDS. However, the conferess did not include the $22 million that the administration had requested to conduct nationwide seroprevalence surveys intended to document the rate of HIV infection around the country. Pilot studies performed by the Centers for Disease Control suggest that these surveys will not be accurate. Therefore, the conferees deleted funding for that particular item, and the administration did not request that it be restored. For all of the remaining AIDS-related activities considered, the conference report provides an amount that is roughly $10 million above the administration's request.

In the Health Resources and Services Administration, the conference report provides almost a $20 million increase over last year's figures for the Community Health Centers basic funding, and also maintains last year's major initiative to combat infant mortality, with a small increase, to $20.5 million. Health care for the homeless is maintained throughout fiscal year 1989 at the same level as provided in fiscal year 1988, albeit at a lower dollar amount because so much of the fiscal year 1988 money remains unallocated to date.

For the National Health Service Corps, field placement strength is essentially maintained at last year's level, while a significant increase is provided for the new loan repayment program aimed at recruiting doctors, nurses, and other health professionals into service with the corps. Health professions training programs, which help to draw practitioners into specialties that face a shortage in supply, were protected against the administration's proposed cut from $217 million to $40 million. And the maternal and child health block grant was given a substantial increase, from $527 million in fiscal year 1988 to $554 million for fiscal year 1989.

Within the Centers for Disease Control, an increase was provided, first, to the Sexually Transmitted Disease Program to address those diseases that are once again on the rise, and which put their victims at greater risk of contracting AIDS. A significant increase, from $86 million to $127 million, was provided for the Childhood Immunization Program. This increase is necessary if we are to keep the immunization rate high while accommodating the increases in vaccine prices and the tax per dose that is used to fund the 1986 vaccine compensation legislation. The Chronic and Environmental Disease Prevention Program also receives an increase, from $43 million to $66 million, which is necessary to maintain the 3-year-old Injury Control Program, which had previously been funded in part by the Transportation Department.

For biomedical research at the National Institutes of Health, not including AIDS, an increase of $346 million is provided for a total of $6.545 billion for fiscal year 1989. This is more than a 5-percent increase and, in order to allow NIH to maximize the productivity of this increase, it has been given to NIH with a minimum of congressional direction or micromanagement—the bill does not include restrictions on the number of new grants to be awarded or the size of the adjustments that can be made to awards when they receive future-year installment amounts. These decisions have been left to the best scientific judgment of the Institute directors.

One NIH initiative that I am particularly proud of is a new learning disabilities initiative that will be conducted by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development. I included funding for this initiative at our subcommittee markup, and I am glad that the conference agreement provides almost my original amount to undertake this initiative. With this funding, close to $2 million, NICHD should be able to set up several centers of concentrated research on learning disabilities around the country; 200 institutions have already expressed interest in hosting those research centers.

I am also proud that the conferees retained $14 million to fund the first stage of construction on a new building at NIH which will house both child health and neuroscience research projects. I have been working since 1979 to attain funding for this building. I am convinced that its construction will contribute greatly to the quality of intramural research that can be conducted in the future. NIH is the premiere biomedical research facility in the world; it's about time its research facilities were, if not made state-of-the-art, then at least brought up to date. The need for new facilities at NIH will be an issue of growing importance in the next few years, but I am glad that we are beginning to tackle the most critical area of need right now.

I am also pleased that this conference report prepares for the creation of a National Institute on Deafness and Other Communicative Disorders. While it is not within the jurisdiction of this committee to go ahead and create the Institute in this act, the conferees have decided to go further than ever before in anticipating the creation of this Institute and mapping out a procedure for making funding available to it as quickly as possible, so that it does not have to await another appropriations bill before it can begin operation.

I am also proud that the funding for the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences includes $500,000 which is intended to continue supporting the important work of the Environmental Health Institute located in Pittsfield, MA. This unique research facility, which has produced impressive work on individuals' genetic susceptibility to disease, is studying issues that are on the cutting edge of science.

Within the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, increases are provided for the continuing fight against substance abuse, through the activities of the National Institute on Drug Abuse; the National Institute on Alcoholism and Alcohol Abuse; the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health block grant; and the substance abuse grants to States.

In addition, ADAMHA-supported researchers will in the future have access to the same kind of support for small instrumentation that NIH researchers have had. And a major increase, from $254 million to $297 million, is provided for research through the National Institute of Mental Health. This is the second largest research increase that NIMH has ever received, and it will allow the Institute to make important expansions in its research into the neurosciences, as recommended by its report on the "Decade of the Brain," into schizophrenia, and into Alzheimer's disease. I am proud that the Institute's "Decade of the Brain" report, which I requested, has resulted in widespread recognition of the fact that we stand on a threshold of opportunity in these areas, and has resulted in a funding increase commensurate with that opportunity.

I am also pleased to have included in the conference report language regarding NIMH activities on the needs of survivors of traumatic brain injury. This will be an important step in its work to help the head-injured population.

If the omnibus drug abuse bill is enacted during the remainder of this session, I hope that, in conference, it will be structured so as to give ADAMHA, and particularly NIDA, the clearest possible statement of Congress' intent on whether or how their role is to change in the future. I hope that we will see expansions in demonstrations and evaluations without jeopardizing the basic research programs. Finally, I hope that the administration will work closely with the Congress to tailor the fiscal year 1989 funding levels to any revised authorization that may be passed.

For the Medicare contractors, the conferees have provided the amount estimated by the Health Care Financing Administration to be necessary to administer the new catastrophic benefits, which will begin phasing in next year.

An increase of $270 million has been provided for the operation of the Social Security Administration. This will enable SSA to expand and improve their telephone service, to maintain their network of local offices for beneficiaries who prefer to conduct their business in person, to start up their new "800" service, to begin mailing out statements of personal earnings and estimated benefits, and to continue a variety of other ongoing program improvements.

In addition, the responsibility of hearing Medicare appeals will be retained by administrative law judges located in Social Security offices around the country, rather than being transferred to a corps of ALJ's who would operate over the phone from HCFA. I believe that this is important if Medicare appeal rights are to remain a valuable safeguard for Medicare beneficiaries.

Within the Office of Human Development, modest increases were provided for programs for children, seniors, and the disabled. And I'm pleased that the new Comprehensive Child Development Centers Program, authorized in the higher education reauthorization bill in order to fill the gaps in, and maximize the effectiveness of other children's programs, will be funded for the first time.

Finally, I'm proud that, for the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, our conferees were able to do better than simply splitting the difference. This important program keeps low-income families from being evicted from their rented homes. It reaches a population largely comprised of children, seniors, and disabled people who are greater risk than others of health complications from extreme heat or cold. With the Senate and the administration pushing hard for only $1.187 billion, our conferees brought back $1.383 billion; if we hadn't had a 1.2 percent across-the-board cut, this figure would have been $1.4 billion.

I fought hard for LIHEAP in the fiscal year 1988 bill, and even harder in preparing for fiscal year 1989. I think that that hard work has begun to pay off, and that we're finally getting across the House's commitment to this vital safety-net program.

For the Education Department, H.R. 4783 provides $21.9 billion, $1.48 billion over the fiscal year 1988 level and $640 million more than the administration requested.

In addition to the compensatory education increases, the conference report proposes a $24.6 million increase for impact aid over the fiscal year 1988 level, $141 million more than was proposed by the administration. This level continues category "b" payments to school districts at $135.3 million.

For School Improvement Programs, we provided an $78.8 million increase over the fiscal year 1988 level, $17 million below the amount requested by the administration. H.R. 4783 provides increases of $739,000 for the Inexpensive Book Distribution Program and $822,000 for the national diffusion network, and $964,000 for the Ellender fellowships.

I am pleased that we were able to fund a number of new initiatives that were created in the extension of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and the Trade and Competitiveness Act, including $3 million for first-time funding for the Comprehensive School Health Education Program, $7.9 million for the Javits Gifted and Talented Education Program, and $5.9 million for the Fund for the Improvement and Reform of Schools and Teaching. In addition, we provided $250,000 for a program to make grants available to high school students for congressional and diplomatic seminars in Washington. I hope the Secretary would give every consideration to the Washington Workshops Foundation as sponsor of the seminars, so that the funds can go to the Claude and Mildred Pepper Scholarship Program for disabled disadvantaged youth.

For vocational and adult education, the conference report provides a $58.3 million increase over the fiscal year 1988 level, $42.3 million more than the President requested. We also provide substantial increases for handicapped education and rehabilitation services in the amounts of $97.4 million and $77.6 million, respectively. Included in the handicapped education amount is $247 million for preschool grants and $5.2 million for technology-related assistance for individuals with disabilities.

For student financial assistance, the conference report provides increases for Pell grants, supplemental grants, and college work-study, in order to continue our effort to redress the imbalance that currently exists between grant and loan programs. The Pell Grant Program will receive an increase of yet another $100 in the maximum for the second straight year, after no increase in the maximum for the preceding 3 years.

I am particularly pleased that the conferees agreed with my effort to provide a substantial increase in the supplemental educational educational grants, a more flexible program with a $4,000 maximum award and an institutional matching requirement that also is targeted on the lowest income and those who already receive Pell grants. SEOG will receive a $29.5 million increase. In addition, we were able to maintain a viable State Student Incentive Grant Program at $72 million, in the face of administration and Senate proposals to gut this valuable program. And Perkins loans will receive new capital contributions of $183.5 million.

The conference report provides funding for virtually all of the existing categorical higher education programs, with an overall increase of $29.3 million.

For title III, the Institutional Development Program, the conferees agreed to provide $174.5 million, an increase of $22.2 million over the fiscal year 1988 level, which would provide funding for all parts of the title in fiscal year 1989 and restore funding for last year's part A continuation awards at 4-year institutions that inadvertently faced 40 percent reductions as a result of the mix of set-asides in the authorizing statute.

For TRIO, although I wish we could have maintained the House level, the conferees provide a $13.4 million increase over the fiscal year 1988 level and the administration request for this program that does so much to reach out and help disadvantaged young people succeed in school and in college. The agreement does provide $2 million for the Ronald McNair Program.

In the graduate education area, the conference agreement provides $66.7 million, an increase of $7.9 million over the fiscal year 1988 level and more than double what the administration requested.

The conference agreement continues the College Housing and Academic Facilities Program at $29.6 million, $32.5 million below last year's level. This program is virtually the only working program to help our colleges and universities meet their renovation and new construction needs, yet it receives very little support among other Members of the House or Senate.

I urge my colleagues to take a look at this program for the benefit it can provide our higher education system and hope that other supporters will emerge next year to maintain this vital program.

The conference agreement also contains a $2.1 million increase in support for libraries, including increases for public library services, interlibrary cooperation, and college library technology.

For the special institutions, the conferees provided a $12.3 million increase, including increases for Howard University and both of the institutions that deal with the hearing impaired: Gallaudet University will increase by $3.8 million over the fiscal year 1988 level, and the National Technical Institute for the Deaf will increase $1.7 million over last year's level.

Among the related agencies, ACTION receives a $5.3 million increase, including increases for VISTA and all three of the Older Americans Volunteer Programs: Foster Grandparents, Senior Companions, and the Retired Senior Volunteer Program. In addition, the conference agreement continues the successful VISTA Literacy Corps Program.

The conference agreement provides a $66.2 million increase for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, including funds for the satellite interconnection fund needed to replace the existing satellite by 1991.

We also have provided funding for five new commissions to deal with railroad retirement reform, children's issues, migrant education, the financing of postsecondary education, and infant mortality.

Mr. Speaker, this conference agreement is a careful balance between our responsibilities to the American people's needs and our responsibilities under the current Federal budget deficit situation. It meets our targets and limitations under last year's budget summit agreement and this year's budget resolution, and it meets the training, health, education, and human services needs of the American people.

I urge adoption of the conference report.

I urge the adoption of the conference report and urge everyone, when we get into the conference amendments, to support the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and myself in regard to the abortion issue.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. EARLY].

Mr. EARLY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for yielding time to me.

I rise in support of the conference committee agreement even though I am disappointed at the numbers, the inadequate numbers, for the greatest facility in the world, the National Health Institutes, but due to the restriction of the moneys that were available to the chairman, that is the most we could get.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to engage in a colloquy with my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify the intent of the conferees with regard to the Cardiac Energetics Program at the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. We have included, in the appropriation for the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute, an additional $3.3 million for the development of a cardiac energetics laboratory. Am I correct that it is the conferees intent that the Institute use these funds, as appropriate, to cover all costs for the purchase and installation of a state-of-the-art magnetic resonance instrument. Including renovation and construction as necessary to meet the special siting requirements of the instrument?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman's understanding is correct.

Mr. EARLY. I thank the chairman.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of our time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this bill and in strong support of the words of my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] as he compliments the chairman and the leadership of this committee. The gentleman from Kentucky, and the gentleman from Massachusetts and the members of this committee have worked long and hard together to fashion a bill that provides important dollars for health and educational matters in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, after freedom there are very few things more important than our health and education, and this bill deals with that, and, while we were limited in the amounts of moneys available, I think we funded the programs to the best of our ability.

I just want to add my very strong compliments to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] because they do provide real honest, genuine, effective leadership.

Mr. Speaker, this bill includes an awful lot of items that are interesting to the American people, and I just want to mention one or two briefly.

We have funded in this bill the National Youth Sports Program, a very important program for disadvantaged young Americans who in the summer are able to go to the campus of junior colleges and other type institutions throughout America and get some exposure to higher education. In addition to having organized, disciplined programs through the summer, this program is designed to help encourage young Americans to continue their education, to stay in school, and it is an extremely important program. Our subcommittee has fought valiantly for the money for that program, and it is in this conference report today.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to one particular item in the health field. Many of us; all of us, I think, at one time or another, have been exposed to a young person or young adult who died of leukemia, of blood cancer. Recently a very dramatic new procedure has been developed to successfully save the lives of people with leukemia. The problem that we face is that in order, and it is a transplant of bone marrow, a procedure, by the way, which was pioneered by a doctor in St. Petersburg, Dr. Robert Good at St. Petersburg Children's Hospital, but in the transplanting of the bone marrow the very critical part of this procedure is having a donor whose bone marrow is an identical match to the recipient. Unfortunately, although the procedure is dramatic, many young persons have died while waiting to find a matched donor. In this bill we provide the funding for and the direction for a bone marrow registry which is already in effect now because of the work of the Committee on Appropriations and this House of Representatives, a bone marrow registry where someone needing a bone marrow transplant, a life-saving procedure, can go to the registry and hopefully find a donor. This is an excellent program, one that will mean an awful lot to an awful lot of Americans in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to go on and relate many other things we have done in the field of health and education in this bill, but, since the Speaker has his gavel in his hand, obviously my time is expired.

I just want to say this is a good bill. My chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and my ranking member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] are good leaders and have put together a good bill. I would like to add that my Senator from Florida who is retiring this year, LAWTON CHILES, who is the chairman of the same committee on the Senate side, also has been a major player in the work of this committee.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], the chairman, yielding, and let me first say what a wonderful job I think the chairman and the ranking member have done on this legislation. All of us appreciate their diligent and hard work.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report accompanying H.R. 4783, fiscal year 1989 Labor-HHS-Education appropriations, affirms the House position in support of new construction and rehabilitation for Jobs Corps centers. May I ask the chairman if he believes that it is the purpose of this funding to develop Job Corps centers in areas not presently served, such as North Dakota?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to say to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] that all down through the years since the gentleman has been here, he has worked with us on our bill. He has been a diligent Member of the House who has worked with us at all times.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman knows, in this bill we have $36 million for 6 new centers. That appears, I believe, on page 12 of the conference report.

The total amount in the bill for the Job Corps is $741,825,000.

In answer to the gentleman's question, States that do not have a center currently should certainly be considered along with any other States that might have some difficulty or might have additional needs, but those States that do not have centers certainly should be considered.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's response, and while both of us understand that the Labor Department will make final decisions on site selection, and that is as it should be, it is as I understand it the chairman's intention that the Department take maximum advantage of locations that have suitable facilities in areas which are underserved or which do now have locations.

As the chairman knows, North Dakota's Governor and its entire congressional delegation have joined in a common effort to support a new Jobs Corps center in the city of Minot. The Air Force is vacating the John Moses Hospital, which has been reviewed by the Labor Department as a candidate site for a new center. Existing law directs that the hospital be leased to the Labor Department cost free if the Department chooses it as a Jobs Corps site.

This is the project on which I have been working with the chairman for 2 years. While the Labor Department will make the final decision on site selection, is it the chairman's intention that the Department take maximum advantage of locations like Minot which have suitable, existing Federal facilities available, which already have a comprehensive plan for implementation, and which enjoy unanimous support in the State.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just clarify what the chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] just said.

I do not know the details of the Air Force Base hospital in North Dakota, but I do know, having had hearings on this matter, that in some cases—and I emphasize some cases—it costs more to renovate an existing facility than to build a whole new one.

I am sure we want to leave it to the discretion of a Secretary of Labor to make a cost-effective decision about whether it is going to cost more or less for an existing facility.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Absolutely. It is the Labor Department's responsibility to make the decisions. They have in fact visited this site and find it to be an interesting and useful site.

My only purpose was to suggest that new locations should be in areas that are underserved or not served now or where a location would be appropriate. We have one that we think is, but it is the Labor Department's determination of exactly where those facilities will be.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume, to my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference agreement on H.R. 4783.

This is the fifth conference report to reach the House floor, so we have only eight left. It is an impressive record of accomplishment to date.

All 13 spending bills first passed through the House on time. All 13 were cleared separately by the Senate.

This is a good record, but it is not good enough. We cannot rest on our laurels, Mr. Speaker, we must see our task through to the end by sending 13 separate conference reports to the President for his signature.

I trust that the Committee on Appropriations is committed to this goal, and I trust that you too, Mr. Speaker, will do all you can to guarantee that 13 spending bills arrive separately and on time—prior to October 1—on the President's desk.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very reasonable piece of legislation—to those who were concerned that this bill was too fat when it first passed the House, I would point out that it contains considerably less discretionary money now than it did at that time. It adds about $340 million to the amount requested by the President—that is less than a 1-percent addition to the amount sought by the President for discretionaries.

The bulk of the rise in funding, of course, is for mandatories—entitlements—and we all know the broken record story of how entitlement programs are driving this Nation into the service of Japanese bond buyers.

Mr. Speaker, I commend and thank my chairman, BILL NATCHER, and my ranking member, SILVIO CONTE, for their leadership and assistance on this bill. The entire Nation is indebted to the leadership and expertise of these two men.

Mr. Speaker, as Congress comes perilously close to triggering Gramm-Rudman, it is incumbent on the appropriators to make up for what is done through authorization.

Gramm-Rudman, Mr. Speaker, says that we must have priorities. If we want drought relief, so be it. If we want free trade with Canada, so be it. If we want welfare reform, so be it.

But if we want all these things, Mr. Speaker, things which cost money, then we will have to find that money somewhere else—we will have to take it out of appropriations because Gramm-Rudman says you have to set priorities. If not, Gramm-Rudman will set those priorities for us. And the priorities represented in a Gramm-Rudman automatic cut are not my priorities, and I daresay they are not the priorities of the House.

So we have trimmed the Labor/HHS bill as part of the committee to setting priorities, as part of the need to avoid a massive sequester which would do substantial harm to these programs.

We have trimmed the bill, but we have been able to provide for some important increases—increases for handicapped education, chapter 1, impact aid; increases for medical research.

There is never enough money in this bill to go around, of course, and as always we are disappointed that we cannot do more. But, the bill does as much with as little as any I have ever seen and I commend it to the House for approval.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report on H.R. 4783 includes an important amendment which I was happy to work to retain. The amendment relieves the Illinois Library System of liability for three audits conducted under the auspices of the Department of Education.

While this may seem an unusual action, I believe that this situation merited such intervention. In my 3 years of work on this subject, I have become absolutely convinced that the Department is wrong on the issue and not willing to reach the logical and correct conclusion. The lawyers, and I can say this because I am a lawyer, did what lawyers sometimes do—they lost sight of the big picture and became lost in the technicalia of seeking victory.

The big picture is a model library system in Illinois which provides access to the public for books from numerous sources, at no benefit to private libraries. That is and always has been considered the definition of public library services. And this view, incidentally, was supported by an outside auditor hired by the Department of Education. The auditor's initial report confirmed that the Illinois system did not violate the law and benefit the public. That auditor was subsequently encouraged to change his point of view.

The legal game was to redefine network systems as nonpublic, to ignore relevant statutes of limitation, and to bury the State of Illinois in a blizzard of paperwork. In the process, they scared many other States away from updating and improving their library systems through networking—networking has always been recognized by program personnel as an effective way to improve the provisions of library services to the public.

I hope that this amendment will encourage the Department to rethink their viewpoint on this matter. They need to recognize that computer networks which allow a public library to reach into a college library to find a book for a public citizen are systems which serve the public and only the public. Such activity doesn't benefit the college, it only benefits the public. It is a title I LSCA function—to improve public library services.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to insist that the strict House version of the Hyde prohibition on the use of Labor/Health and Human Services funds for abortions, except in cases to save the life of the mother, be included in the fiscal year 1989 conference report.

Rape and incest cases are extremely difficult, but difficult cases make bad law. The overriding consideration today must be protecting the lives of the most innocent of society, the unborn.

The 1973 abortion ruling was incorrect law and unwise public policy. And, I have worked since 1973 to overturn that ruling. Though that goal has thus far been elusive, much to the chagrin of all of us who value the sanctity of human life, we can take solace in having at least been successful in strictly cutting back on the expenditure of tax dollars for abortion services and saving countless innocent lives. Now is not the time to retreat. We must insist on the strictest possible prohibition on the use of Labor/Health and Human Services funds in this Appropriations measure before us today and we must redouble our efforts to overturn the disastrous 1973 Supreme Court ruling.

I pledge my continuing and unwavering support for a human life constitutional amendment as well as for legislation to put the strict Hyde prohibition in place governmentwide. Until we reach those goals, unfortunately, we must continue to add strict abortion prohibitions to all appropriate legislative vehicles coming before the House.

I strongly encourage my House colleagues to support this motion today.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL] a valuable member of the committee.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to congratulate two outstanding Americans and two great leaders in education and health, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

I especially want to pay tribute to our great staff, nonpartisan, bipartisan, just terrific constructive policymakers, who have helped me and all the other members of the committee.

I just wanted to make two brief points this morning, because the time is short on a Friday.

I want to congratulate the committee for recognizing the nursing research community in the United States. They do not have a strong voice sometimes in the House, as we see with the medical profession and the dental profession and other groups that do. I just think the committee has done an outstanding job in recommending new nursing research centers for the United States, and I want to congratulate our leadership for taking that major step forward in policy decisions this year.

Also, I want to thank the committee for accepting my recommendations on chronic disease. We increased the appropriation there because we are having more deaths in the field of heart, lung, and cancer, geriatrics, diabetes problems, hypertension and strokes, more than we are in AIDS.

I think it is an appropriate compliment to the committee that we recognize the older Americans who die of these chronic illnesses, that we are recognizing the need for better research and breakthroughs so that we can have some cure for some of these chronic diseases.

Lastly, I want to congratulate the committee in light of the deficit for increasing the education budget by $1.5 billion this year, with the two national candidates for President recommending education as a national priority. We have known that for many years, and even though we respect local control of our educational systems and State responsibility, we are funding student aid, VoTech and other education components to help support our local school systems.

So I congratulate the committee for an outstanding piece of work in increasing the educational components for those of us who have supported education over the years. So I want to thank the committee and recommend endorsement of the bill for passage by the House today.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to pay my respects and my thanks to the members of this subcommittee. As we know, on our Appropriations Committee we have 13 subcommittees.

I want to say that no subcommittee does a better job or has a harder job to handle than our friends who head this committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], and all the members of the subcommittee.

Whatever our problems are, we have got to look at our own country first. We have got to put first things first. Health and labor and all these things that are involved here are important, including the National Institutes of Health, Education and all the rest certainly is important, because unless we take care of our people in our own country, we cannot do many of the other things that we try to do.

With the cooperation of the subcommittee, I hope we can get an investigation of what might be done to save small town hospitals. Eighty-four percent of the area of this country is said to consist of rural areas, including cities of 50,000 or less. Place after place, town after town, including county seat towns, are losing their hospitals because of the difference in payments from Medicaid and Medicare, and because the manufacturers of those things that are so necessary to run a hospital are charging small hospitals much higher rates than they charge the larger hospitals. The excuse is that in the process, because they are large hospitals and, they buy many more of these various units that are essential to run a hospital, that they are giving them a break.

The effect is to keep the people in rural towns and small city areas from getting the same quality treatment and the same health protection that is available to them in our major cities.

In other words, we are driving a wedge between our cities and rural areas.

I expect, with the support of this committee, to have an investigation to see what may be done. It may require a law to see what we can do there.

Again, without going into detail here, I want to thank each and everyone, particularly my good friend, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BILL NATCHER, with whom I have served since I came here. I came earlier to get ready for him, may I say. The same might go for my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. SILVIO CONTE.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which is supported by all of the members of the Committee on Appropriations. When you deal with the health and education of the citizens of this country, nothing deserves more attention and the committee agreed that these programs are so important that an adequate allocation must be made in order to support them.

Let us look at some of the programs that are funded in the bill, including our junior colleges and many programs for senior colleges.

I shall not mention all the programs because they have been discussed by the chairman and the ranking minority member.

I am pleased that we provide $911,256,000 for vocational education;

For job training, $1,787,772,000;

For summer youth employment, $709,433,000;

For the Job Corps, $741,825,000;

For acquired immune deficiency syndrome—AIDS, $1,223,692,000 for research, education, and other activities directed at the prevention and treatment of this fatal disease;

For Head Start, $1,235,000;

For the National Institutes of Health, excluding AIDS, $6,545,215,000; and

For developing institutions, $174,577,000 which includes assistance to historically black colleges, as well as newer ones including Mississipi Valley State University.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time on this side, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, this Member from California will at the conclusion of the debate on the conference report offer a motion to recommit with instructions. Since that is not debatable and there will be no time, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for giving me this time now to discuss what the instructions will be in this motion to recommit.

There are three parts.

1. Conscience Clause Amendment: None of the funds made available under this Act shall be used to require any person or entity to perform, or facilitate in any way the performance of any abortion.

This was unanimously adopted by the Senate on a voice vote. It was modified in the conference to reflect current law, which does not give the protection that is needed. Hence its conclusion in this motion to recommit with instructions.

2. Homosexuality Amendment: None of the funds made available by this Act shall be used in materials, curriculums, or programs that promote or encourage homosexuality or to use words stating that homosexuality is "normal," "natural," or "healthy."

This was unanimously adopted by the Senate on a voice vote. It was dropped in the conference.

The third element:

3. Fetal Research Amendments:

i. None of the funds appropriated under this Act shall be used to perform an abortion on a woman for the sole purpose of providing fetal organs or tissue for medical transplantation to any animal or person.

ii. (a) None of the funds appropriated under this Act shall be used to knowingly acquire, receive or otherwise transfer any human (including that acquired from a fetus) organ or organ subpart for valuable consideration for use in human or animal transplantation.

(b) None of the funds appropriated under this Act shall be used to knowingly acquire, receive or otherwise transfer any human organ or organ subpart derived from a fetus that has been aborted for the sole purpose of medically transplanting such organs or organ subparts to any animal or person.

iii. None of the funds appropriated under this Act shall be used to offer any inducement, monetary or otherwise, for a woman to have an abortion for the purpose of providing fetal organs or tissue for medical transplantation to any animal or person.

iv. None of the funds shall be used to waive the minimal risk standard for fetal research.

These three elements will be in the motion to recommit with instructions. I ask for your vote on the rollcall that this Member intends to ask, and I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for the time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to break up this love feast between the admirers of the bill, but I suppose there is a point in every discussion where the curmudgeons must be heard.

I yield to no one in my respect for the chairman of this distinguished subcommittee, nor its distinguished ranking member. Nevertheless, I feel it is important to point out that this bill is going to cost the taxpayers $11 billion more than last year's bill, if I am reading the numbers on page 101 of the report of the manager's correctly. That is an increase some several times greater than the CPI increase for this year.

Even though we are informed that the President will sign the bill, the increase seems to me to be unnecessarily large. I note that in the labor section, the increase is restricted to approximately a freeze, a nominal freeze, that is, something a little more than 3 percent.

In Education, I think many Members of this House, including myself, do not mind going beyond cost of living increases, but when one looks at the HHS portion which has the lion's share of the increases, as it should because it is the lion's share of the bill, one finds increases of better than 10 percent, which seems to me unreasonable in a time of fiscal difficulty.

So again, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the increases in the related agencies and in HHS make it impossible for me to vote for the bill, in spite of the fact that I would agree with much of the previous conversation that relates to the wonderful work of the subcommittee and of the conferees on the other side of the Capitol.

I shall vote "no."

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 4783, the fiscal year 1989 Appropriations bill for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. As ranking Republican of the Committee on Education and Labor, I want to commend Chairman NATCHER, the ranking member Mr. CONTE, and the Members of the Labor-HHS-Education Subcommittee, for having so successfully defended the priorities of this House in the vital policy and programmatic areas encompassed by this bill. Moreover, I believe they should be further congratulated for having achieved this success within the rigorous parameters set forth by both the 1987 Economic Summit and the fiscal year 1989 budget resolution's tight 302(b) allocations.

Some months ago I was given the opportunity to appear before the Appropriations Subcommittee to discuss the programmatic and funding issues which have concerned my committee this year. We had more than the usual number of these since this was a year which has seen my committee reauthorize some of the major legislation under our jurisdiction and, in so doing, both strengthen existing programs and launch new initiatives. In particular, since this past spring my committee concluded an in-depth revision of our elementary and secondary education programs—Public Law 100-297, the Hawkins-Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988—I was most eager to persuade the subcommittee to provide appropriate levels of funding for both the familiar and the new programs in our legislation.

The Appropriations Committee and this body did indeed once again express their steadfast commitment to the funding of elementary and secondary, education programs. And, as one who has always viewed ESEA's chapter 1 as the flagship of Federal support to our Nation's schools, I was especially pleased to learn how well the conference report supports chapter 1's various programmatic components. Not only are chapter 1's basic grants and—for the first time since 1981—its concentration grants well provided for, but it is clear that our conferees fought to preserve funding for one chapter 1 initiative, Even Start, and agreed to the funding of another new component, the Rural Educational Opportunities Program.

Developed by our distinguished colleague, Bill Goodling, Even Start seeks to encourage schools to offer programs that will have the dual effect of helping parents who have not completed their high school education gain literacy skills and simultaneously become active partners in their children's educational development.

Aware along with many other Members of the special problems faced by small, rural schools, I was delighted to find that the conference report provides almost $4 million to get the Rural Educational Opportunities Program underway. Under this program, at least 10 regional rural assistance centers will be established to provide technical assistance to rural schools with chapter 1 children in attendance with the view of improving the quality of the education such children receive.

I also want to particularly commend and thank our conferees for preserving the greater part of the modest 2-year funding they and the House had earlier provided to launch the National Commission on Responsibilities for Financing Postsecondary Education.

When my committee was preparing to reexamine and reauthorize the Higher Education Act [HEA], it occurred to me that if at one time each of the usual participants in financing postsecondary education—students, parents, colleges, the States, and the Federal Government—had held a reasonably clear grasp of their respective financial responsibilities, this was no longer the case. Today students have greatly increased loan debt burdens at graduation. Some parents refuse to help their children finance their education. A few States have increased higher education appropriations while others have cut them. Congress and the executive branch are debating the appropriate magnitude of Federal student assistance in light of our deficit burden.

With these factors in mind, I successfully sponsored an amendment to HEA (now section 1321 of the act) which would establish a national commission of highly respected individuals. Their tasks would be to study the impact of the changing roles of the various participants in the financing of postsecondary education and, within 2 years, provide useful guidance on who should be expected to pay what share of a student's education. I am sure that the modest cost of this commission will be repaid back to the taxpayer as it moves forward to create a new national consensus over who benefits from a college education and who should pay.

In the course of reauthorizing and amending the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978 this year, my committee contributed to the development of two new Adoption Opportunities Program initiatives: the Minority Children Placement Program and the Postlegal Adoption Services

Program. I'm pleased that the conference has seen fit to launch these programs by providing each of them with $500,000. Even these modest levels of funding make good humanitarian and fiscal sense—it is far more expensive to maintain these children in temporary foster care or in long-term institutional settings than to place them in homes where they are desired and loved.

The conference report also makes it clear, Mr. Speaker, that thanks primarily to the levels of support our Appropriations Committee recommended and the House endorsed, as well as to the agreements reached by our conferees, four key postsecondary education programs have been provided with funding levels above their fiscal year 1989 baselines: the group of special programs for the disadvantaged known as TRIO, the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants [SEOG], the Pell Grants, and the Income Contingent Loan Program. I was also especially pleased to find that in the area of our special education concerns, the early intervention components of our Education for the Handicapped Act programs as well as the Rehabilitation Act programs received funding above their respective fiscal year 1989 baseline levels.

One of the funding issues which concerned my committee earlier this year was that our Budget Resolution's assumptions were not responsive to the needs of the Older Americans Act (OAA) programs. I expressed these concerns to our Appropriations Committee, noting that if the funding of supportive services to seniors and of the senior congregate and home-delivered meal programs were frozen at fiscal year 1988 levels, we could expect to see these programs cut back in the number of services and meals provided, or in the quality of what was provided, or both. I was very pleased, consequently, to find that the conference report provides these three OAA title III programs with funding levels that will at least partially cushion the erosion of inflation on their service levels.

Our conferees also deserve our thanks for having fought to prevent truly drastic reductions in the funding of the State Student Incentive Grants [SSIG] program. Their support for this program, an important one in the educational effort of my State, serves to further correct the current imbalance between student loans and grants.

As generally pleased as I am by this finely crafted conference report, I would not be candid if I did not express my disappointment with the funding cuts it imposes on the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program [LIHEAP] and on the Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA] titles II-A Basic Grant and II-B Summer Youth Employment Programs, and with its response to my committtee's concerns in the area of worker safety and health.

In the case of LIHEAP, it appears that despite our common efforts to increase or at least sustain its funding levels, this conference report continues to victimize this program with perhaps the largest percentage cuts inflicted upon any of our low-income programs since 1982. Consider what has happened over the past two fiscal years and will now happen in the coming one: the fiscal year 1987 LIHEAP appropriation was $126 million or 6.3 percent less than the fiscal year 1986 appropriation; the fiscal year 1988 appropriation was $350 million or 18.6 percent less than that for fiscal year 1987; and now the fiscal year 1989 appropriation will be $149 million or 9.7 percent less than last year's. Thus, just in this 3-year period, LIHEAP's level of funding has been cut by $625 million or 31.1 percent.

I keep wondering, Mr. Speaker, when the other body will finally stop believing that LIHEAP is awash with money due to oil overcharge funds, and will start grasping the fact that the shrinking supply of those funds is not available to States as a supplemental source of low-income energy assistance.

The fiscal year 1989 funding level proposed for the two JTPA programs is the second lowest each has received since JTPA was enacted in 1982. We now know that the present problems of the unemployed, the underemployed, and of disadvantaged youth are not just tragic current concerns. They are a preview of what we will have to respond to in order to assure our future workforce has the needed capabilities to sustain our future economic strength and standard of living. Given this understanding, these cuts are very difficult to comprehend and accept.

Along with my committee chairman, Mr. HAWKINS, and the chairman and ranking minority member of our Subcommittee on Health and Safety, earlier this year I communicated two major concerns to our Appropriations Committee which stemmed from oversight hearing findings. Our oversight hearings had revealed that the Occupational Safety and Health Administration [OSHA] was woefully lacking in inspectors in general and in well-trained construction inspectors in particular. They had also made it clear that because the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health's [NIOSH] increases in funding in recent years had barely covered the erosion of inflation, NIOSH was in danger of losing its state-of-the-art capability to analyze hazards connected with the roughly 5,000 new toxic substances coming on the market every year as well as part of its professional staff. The fiscal year 1989 funding the conference report provides for OSHA and NIOSH is once again below the respective fiscal year 1989 baseline levels for the two agencies; hence service levels in the critical arena of worker safety and health will continue to be eroded.

On balance, Mr. Speaker, our conferees have brought us a careful and thoughtful compromise in funding priorities and funding levels in this conference report that will benefit a broad range of Americans of all ages. I encourage my colleagues to give it their full support.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, my friend, Mr. BILL FRENZEL, is an able Member of this House.

□ 1215

I have listened to him carefully on the statement he just made, and I think, Mr. Speaker, he should hear what the President of the United States says about this bill. I had not intended to call it up but I believe Members should be aware of what the President has said about the conference agreement. This letter was directed, Mr. Speaker, to the Speaker of the House on September 7, 1988, from the President.

Here is what the letter says:

> DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The committee of conference on the Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education Appropriations bill for fiscal year 1989 (H.R. 4783) reported a bill that I can sign if it does not contain the Senate's proposed abortion provisions. I understand that the conferees did not reach agreement on the abortion issue and the two Houses will vote on it again.

That, as you know, Mr. Speaker, will take place today.

> The House passed the Hyde Amendment language that provides:
> "None of the funds contained in this Act shall be used to perform abortions except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term."
> The House provision protects the lives of America's unborn children and I strongly support it.
> The Senate amended the bill to permit use of funding for abortions in cases in which the life of the mother would not be endangered if the fetus were carried to term. The Senate language would permit the use of Federal funds for the slaughter of unborn children, depriving the innocent of the most basic of civil rights—the right to life.
> I will veto the bill if it is presented to me with the Senate language. If it is instead presented to me only with the House language, the bill will merit my approval.
> I urge the Congress to vote to protect the lives of America's unborn children.
> Sincerely,
> RONALD REAGAN.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States, Ronald Reagan, has signed this bill every time that it has been presented to him, and he will sign it when it goes down this time, but I thought I ought to call it to the attention of the Members of the House. That is what the President says.

We are a little bit over his budget request, but as far as the numbers are concerned, Mr. Speaker, as far as the amounts are concerned in this bill, the President of the United States will sign it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join my good chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], in answering my good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

I think that he should look at the President's request. The President's request on research on AIDS is $315 million over last year. The President's request for biomedical research is $336 million more than last year. In compensatory education, the President's request is $230 million over what we appropriated last year, and in student aid, the President requests $555 million more than we appropriated last year. So we cannot just blame the Congress that this bill is over last year because of what the Congress did. There is about $1.4 billion that the President requested over what we appropriated last year.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit with instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the conference report?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DANNEMEYER moves to recommit the conference report on the bill H.R. 4783 to the committee of conference with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to agree to the amendments of the Senate numbered 49, 135, 252, 253, 254, and 255.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule XV, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the question of passage.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 183, nays 212, not voting 36, as follows:

Messrs. VANDER JAGT, ROBINSON, QUILLEN, SWEENEY, YOUNG of Alaska, GLICKMAN, and ERDREICH, Mrs. PATTERSON, Messrs. HARRIS, MOLLOHAN, BEVILL, and YOUNG of Florida, Mrs. BOGGS, Ms. KAPTUR, Messrs. MONTGOMERY, FLIPPO, GALLO, RAY and DERRICK, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. FAWELL, and THOMAS A. LUKEN changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes".

□ 1245

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WRIGHT was allowed to speak out of order.)

RECITATION OF THE PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, earlier today one of the Members of the House sought recognition and, having gained recognition, offered a motion to require the daily recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag.

The Chair ruled on that occasion that the motion was not in order and I think most Members on both sides, parliamentarians that they are, recognize that the ruling of the Chair was correct. Under the rules of the House, that motion was not in order.

In order to amend the daily proceedings of the House, we should amend the rules of the House that are applicable. And so the vote which ensued on the question of sustaining the ruling of the Chair was not a question of whether a Pledge of Allegiance is a good thing, not a question of whether we ought to say the Pledge of Allegiance; it was a question of whether the Chair had correctly ruled.

Now I think a great many of the Members seriously were sorry that a vote should have occurred on that question because, obviously, the Chair was correct. The Parliamentarian sustains it, all the precedents of the House sustain it.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. No, I will not yield at this time. I have a statement that I want to make and when I have concluded my statement, the gentleman can be recognized if he wishes. I do have something that I think Members will be interested in hearing.

The Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag if a part of our precious heritage as a nation. I do not think any of us finds fault with the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Surely, no Member would have any objection to reciting the Pledge of Allegiance since each of us, in effect, recites that very pledge when he takes his oath of office to uphold and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States of America against all enemies, foreign and domestic, to bear true faith and allegiance to the same.

And so none of us objects to the Pledge of Allegiance; all of us embrace the Pledge of Allegiance. But I think it is very important that all of us recognize that the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag is something intended to unite us, not intended to divide us.

I think all of us and each of us in his heart of hearts would subscribe to the belief that patriotism knows no political party. I think each of us will rightly concede that those of the other political party are equally patriotic; all of us believe in America; all of us want to defend this country. And surely nothing would be more reprehensible than for any of us to suggest that another Member or another citizen simply by reason of adhering to the principles of the other political party, was less patriotic than ourselves.

Judge Learned Hand said it well; he said that "society is already in the process of dissolution where neighbors begin to view one another with suspicion or where non-conformity with accepted creed becomes a mark of disaffection." Let that not be the epitaph of this civilization.

And so on next Tuesday, the next day of convening, I just would like to announce that following the recitation of the prayer by our Chaplain, following the approval of the Journal, the Chair will call upon Mr. MONTGOMERY, the gentleman from Mississippi, to lead a Pledge of Allegiance.

And on a subsequent day, the Chair would like the privilege of calling upon, let us say, the gentleman from California, if Mr. LEWIS would lead us on Wednesday in the Pledge of Allegiance.

So let us, let us reaffirm, let us seriously reaffirm that the rules of the House are important and that the rules of the House are not subject to temporary emotions and sudden whims and that whoever he be, who sits in the Chair, has the responsibility to rule and uphold the rules of the House and that the rest of us have the responsibility to sustain him when rightly he rules and that all of us embrace the flag and the Constitution of the United States, one Nation, under God, indivisible, and that we recite it as a deed of our unity and never may it be used as an instrument of disunity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind Members that this will be a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—yeas 335, nays 60, not voting 36, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Houghton for, with Mr. Boulter against.

So the conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes".

PROCEDURE FOR PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE IN THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The Chair desires to be eminently fair. Therefore, without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 1 minute to speak out of order.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it was my intention, when all the Members were present in the body and the Speaker was before us, to make an inquiry of the Speaker and request that he ask unanimous consent to change the rules of the House to make it standard operating procedure that we have the Pledge of Allegiance following the prayer before each session. The Speaker at the time of applause left the Chamber, so that is not feasible.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that in order to discharge a bill before the Rules Committee—and there is such a bill, H. Res. 501, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], which is in print—in order to discharge that bill so it could come to the floor where we could debate it here and have a vote yes or no on the Pledge of Allegiance question, I would have to have previously gotten the approval of the majority leader and the majority whip on that, as well as the approval of the minority leader and the minority whip.

Would the Chair clarify precisely for me what kind of exercise I must go through to get that approval?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, the Chair would state that the Speaker's announcement is in accordance with the rules of the House, and that that procedure will be followed next Tuesday.

The Chair will further state to the gentleman from California, that to make any unanimous-consent request now would require the approval of both sides, to bring up the resolution to which he alluded.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, would the Chair clarify this for me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman propounding a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LEWIS of California. Yes, Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, is the Speaker's ruling essentially this, that I would have to get the approval of the majority leader and the majority whip—I already have the approval of the minority leader and the minority whip—in order to seek recognition for that purpose? Is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the Speaker's announced guidelines on making a unanimous-consent request to consider an unreported measure, regardless of what committee is involved, require that it be cleared on both sides of the aisle, floor and committee leadership, including the chairman. In this case it would be the chairman of the Rules Committee. That is why the Chair was stating to the gentleman, in response to his inquiry, that all of the Speaker's guidelines must be followed by contacting both the minority leader and the majority leader and the chairman and ranking minority member of the Rules Committee. The Chair could then recognize a Member for that purpose once it had been cleared.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the latter comment. The Chair has indicated that once I have gotten the permission essentially or had gotten the approval of the Speaker, the chairman of the Rules Committee, the majority leader, and the majority whip to request withdrawal of House Resolution 501, which would bring this issue of a Pledge of Allegiance to us, then unanimous consent could be requested for that item to come to the floor and to be debated and voted upon?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has stated the situation accurately. It would be handled in the ordinary fashion that we handle resolutions here on the floor that have been cleared on both sides with the floor leadership and the leadership of the committee. The gentleman states it correctly.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I might mention to the Members of the House that the Speaker has helped us a lot by, first of all, indicating that he was going to call upon a Member to lead the Pledge of Allegiance on the first legislative day of next week, and then upon myself for the second legislative day. I presume that means Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

Beyond that point, let it be said that it is my intention to seek their approval for a request to withdraw House Resolution 501 from the Rules Committee so that we can bring this issue to the floor and have a full-scale debate on the question of a Pledge of Allegiance and a vote up or down on the measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman knows that this body has that right.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield, I would just like to say that House Resolution 501 has been in print for about 6 weeks. There is, therefore, cosponsorship, and if there is any Member who would like to cosponsor it between now and next Tuesday, when we would be asking for it to come up, we would ask that they just notify the Speaker and we will put it in.

Mr. LEWIS of California. I thank the Chair.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. NATCHER

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. NATCHER moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 28, 33, 36, 40, 41, 42, 45, 47, 50, 53, 57, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 74, 78, 84, 87, 105, 115, 117, 120, 121, 127, 151, 166, 172, 173, 186, 199, 200, 208, 218, 225, 228, 231, 232, 244, 248, and 249 and concur therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] desire to take time on this motion?

Mr. NATCHER. I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to rise and express my strong support for the work of the subcommittee and the work of the conference on the question of the Job Corps Centers. I commend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] for their hard work in expanding the Job Corps Center Program, and, Mr. Speaker, I just want to rise in strong support of that.

I particularly appreciate the fact that we are committing $12 million more for acquisition and planning for fiscal years 1988, 1989, and 1990. We are committing the necessary resources, in the neighborhood of $6 million, for six new centers, and I hope that with the location of the centers in selected sites, under the Department of Labor, they will make the decisions that need to be made. I would point out that the State of Kansas and several other States do not currently have a Job Center, and, for example, the Job Corps is currently contracting to recruit some 900 new youth to participate in the Job Corps Program. I would make the point that I believe Kansas can still make an argument that they are deserving of a Job Corps Center.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee again and the gentleman from Massachusetts for their work. I also thank the gentleman from Wisconsin with whom I have worked on this particular issue.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONTE. No, I am not.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, the chairman and the ranking member are in favor of the motion which I oppose. I would ask, pursuant to clause 2 of rule XXVIII, that the time be equally divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Hoyer] will be recognized for 20 minutes, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Natcher] will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NACHER].

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR].

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago while driving along I saw a bumper sticker on a car that said, "A fetus is a little human." I think that goes to the essence of this debate. Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about is a human being.

America has come to be known as the disposable society, but that should not include people, the elderly in their senset years; it should not include the retarded, nor the handicapped, and we certainly should not discard children before they are born.

Dr. Bernard Nathanson, a New York obstetrician-gynecologist, was a founder of the National Abortion Rights League. He was a militant abortion rights supporter before the U.S. Supreme Court decision. Nathanson founded and served as director of the first and largest abortion clinic in the United States. A year and a half and 60,000 abortions later, he resigned as head of that clinic. He wrote:

> I am deeply troubled by my own increasing certainty that I have in fact presided over 60,000 deaths. There is no longer serious doubt in my mind that human life exists within the womb from the very onset of pregnancy.
> The infinitely agonizing truth is that in an abortion we are taking life.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago I conducted a hearing in which a doctor recounted the story of a patient who in his words was poor, raped, black, pregnant, and teenaged.

□ 1330

"As I talked with her," he said, "she made it very clear that abortion was not ever a consideration."

She said, "I couldn't do that to something that is half of me."

What public policy question could be more vital to the well-being of society than whether a fetus is human. It is an established biological fact that the existence of a human being begins at conception and that the individual so created remains a human being throughout every stage of biological development thereafter.

But there are some forms of life that people are concerned about enough to protect, to change the law so that vulnerable life can be protected. In Arizona a person can be fined $300 for destroying a Gila monster egg. In that same State, there is no fine for destroying a 28-week-old unborn human being.

The focus of this debate, however, is language to provide for Federal funding of abortion in cases of rape or incest. This issue must be addressed with dignity, with sensitivity and respect for the victims, both mother and potentially unborn child.

Rape is a violent crime against a woman, an innocent victim, a defenseless woman. Abortion is also a violent destruction of equally innocent human life, the unborn, including the unborn resulting from rape, but it is also a fact that prompt medical treatment following rape prevents pregnancy. In correspondence with the former chairman of the subcommittee on then HEW, Mr. Flood, a physician wrote: "As an emergency room physician, I would like to share with you my knowledge about treatment of rape and incest victims, rape treated in the emergency room of hospitals. No competent doctor would expose a woman to the hazards of an abortion when a simple medical curettage is available to prevent pregnancy in rape. The patient is given estrogen for 5 days, which makes it impossible for the woman to conceive."

Life must not become a privilege reserved for the strong and denied to the old, to the retarded, to the handicapped or to the voiceless and the voteless among us, the unborn.

In this throwaway society of ours, what we ought to throw away is the junk ethic that dismisses the unborn simply as a mass of cells, simply a collection of tissue that can be discarded without remorse, as a hindrance or as a nuisance. That ethic and the legal framework provided by the Supreme Court decision in Roe versus Wade does more than destroy unborn human life. It literally has a corrosive effect upon the very fabric of society and demoralizes society itself.

We should resolve to show a strength of principle that will restore meaning to life, the right to life of the unborn, including those who may be the progeny of a pregnancy that results tragically from rape or incest.

Taking innocent unborn life will not ease the abuse of rape, ease the abuse created when an innocent female victim is brutalized. It will not apprehend the rapist. It will not heal the emotional scars of that violent crime.

Mr. Speaker, we should stay with the House position and reject the position of the other body.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding this time to me.

Let me at the outset say that I understand the depth of feeling of those who support the motion and who feel that abortion should be permitted only when the life of the mother is in danger. I understand the sincerity with which those who advocate that position come to the floor.

I wish they would understand that there are some of us who feel with equal fervor that to force a woman who has been raped to carry to term the fetus that is the product of that rape is an act of horrible cruelty second only to the rape itself.

Now, I know that obviously that position is one that morally is inconsistent with the position of those who are supporting the motion, but I suggest to you it is certainly an understandable, defensible position, and one which I would hope those who do not like abortion would nonetheless understand.

So recognizing the terrible dilemma that we face when a woman is raped and a pregnancy results from that, I would hope that they would at least acknowledge that there is enough moral controversy, that that is a decision as to what should happen to the product of that rape that is best left to the woman's own conscience, the woman's own relationship to God. If you belive that, as I do, I would only hope that you would vote no, so that we can sustain the Senate position.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is an issue on which the opinions of Members are deeply held and on which the consequences to individuals are very substantial. Those on both sides of this issue will talk about the consequences to other human beings.

First of all, let me take a brief time to explain what this is. The other body added an amendment overwhelmingly to their bill which said in the instances—the sole instances—where a pregnancy results as the result of the rape of a woman, or where a pregnancy results from an incestuous attack, in that instance and in the other instances which are presently in the law where the life of the mother is in the balance, in those instances alone, poor women will like other women who do not need public assistance, allowed to use public funds for abortion services.

There was an additional provision in that bill, interestingly, and language that we have adopted some four times between 1980 and 1982, which says that a State will have the option still to opt out to say no not even in these instances of vicious sexual attack will we exempt a woman from carrying the child of her attacker however psychologically damaging that may be, however permanently damaging that may be.

This amendment simply makes those sole exceptions, and no broader.

I think, Mr. Speaker, this is the appropriate and sensitive and humane step for us to take. We disagree, we understand. I would ask, therefore, that the motion be defeated.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to our colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, clearly rape and incest are unconscionable assaults on women and children. While abortion likewise is a violent assault on an innocent unborn child, I believe that the Federal Government should not be paying for any person to be assaulted, whether he or she is born or unborn.

Mr. Speaker, as I have listened to this debate, and especially as it has proceeded over the years on rape and incest, I am always struck by how the abortion proponents have attempted to frame the debate. We have, of course, in America, abortion on demand, a million and a half children killed each and every year, a staggering and overwhelming number.

It is deeply regrettable that not one of these little persons are to the abortion proponents worth legally protecting. Clearly, this position of supporting abortion on demand from fertilization throughout the total 9 months of pregnancy has scant support in our Nation. So the abortion proponents are not focusing on their extreme position of destroying unborn children for any reason any time prior to birth. No, they are focusing on advocating abortion where pregnancy results from rape or incest. They focus on a situation which rarely occurs, but which is so emotionally laden that they appear to have a reasonable position, while their opponents are painted as being unreasonable.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, the proabortion position, notwithstanding its surface appeal, is the unreasonable position and is also the unjust position.

Since 1973, those who promote the violence of abortion have had their season of child deaths, a straggering 22 million have perished. I believe this is a national scandal.

Mr. Speaker, I am encouraged that in the last few years and months that the truth seems to be penetrating society. There seems to be a growing recognition of what abortion is and what it does to the woman, as well as what it does to the baby.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who support life care and we care deeply for both the women and their children. We care, regardless of the circumstances of a persons beginning or his race or creed or whether or not that child is handicapped or suffers some other anomaly, because all human life is so precious.

Mr. Speaker, it is not odd that when we talk about human rights so often in this Chamber that the most basic and most fundamental of all human rights, the right to life, is the one that this country does not respect?

Mr. Speaker, to be sure, we care, those of us in the prolife movement, and we are absolutely repelled by the fact that each day in America some 4,000 unborn children are killed. They are torn apart. They are cut apart. They are poisoned and they are asphyxiated by abortion procedures. This indeed is a national scandal.

We care, Mr. Speaker, and publicly stand for the unborn child, not only when it is convenient to do so, like when the child is wanted or when the child is planned or when the child is perfect, but we also stand for the child when it is most difficult to do so. Clearly, a child is a child and his or her worth is not diminished one iota by the circumstances of that beginning. That again is the truest definition of human rights.

Mr. Speaker, finally, if Members vote to reverse the current Hyde language, children will surely die. I urge a "yes" vote, sustain the House position, sustain the Hyde amendment.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOLLOHAN].

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, one of the frustrations of debating the larger issue of abortion is that the two opposing sides are not usually divided over questions of logic. After many years of debate over the general issue of abortion, only a few still question the existence of life before birth. Life begins at conception.

The opposing sides reach their respective positions on abortion based on what value they place on human life at any particular stage of development. Debate over this fundamental question can be difficult, because we do not always agree on the logical framework we should use to answer the question.

The more narrow question before us today, however, is different, whether to allow Medicaid funding of abortion in cases of rape and incest can, regardless of one's views on abortion, be logically answered in only one way, in the negative. It is not a difficult analysis.

Mr. Speaker, those of us who vote on the prolife side have determined that life is worth protecting at every stage of development. Abortion is wrong. It is the taking of human life, life that the sovereign, the Government, has an interest in protecting. The majority of Members of both Houses share this view, as evidence by repeated adoption of the Hyde amendment. We believe abortion is wrong, and consequently we believe that Federal money should not be used to support it. If you adopt our premise that unborn life is valuable, and therefore abortion is fundamentally wrong, there is no logical reason for allowing exceptions in cases of rape and incest.

Regardless of the tragic circumstances of conception, exceptions in cases of rape and incest.

Regardless of the tragic circumstances of conception, abortion remains the taking of human life. Concede us that point and you must reject an effort to carve out a rape and incest exception.

As an individual Member you may disagree with our premise, but Congress as a whole by adopting the Hyde amendment adopts our premise as its starting point. A prolife Member and a Member who supports abortion should agree logically on this point. There is no basis for compromising the integrity of the Hyde amendment. You either vote for the Hyde amendment or you vote against it. You do not, however, search for some middle ground that logically cannot exist, and you do not vote for the Exon amendment.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOLLOHAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Does the gentleman feel there ought to be an exception for life of the mother if the life of the mother is endangered, then it is permissible to grant an abortion to the woman?

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Indeed, and that is implicit—explicit in the Hyde amendment, because, if the gentlewoman will allow me to finish my answer, when we have two competing lives in being, it is logical to opt for the mature life in being.

Mrs. BOXER. There are two competing lives, and the gentleman comes down on the side of the life of the mother rather than the life of the fetus?

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Indeed, as the Hyde amendment does, and the Congress has affirmed numerous times.

Mrs. BOXER. Let me ask my friend this question. Let us take a situation where a husband and a wife are in the privacy of their own home. An intruder comes in, a rapist, rapes the woman, almost kills her, murders the husband. The woman survived is pregnant, and this gentleman is saying that that woman should be forced to have that child of the murderer; is that correct?

□ 1345

Mr. MOLLOHAN. We have equally tragic situations that the gentlewoman is describing presenting extremely tough choices, the tragic situation of destroying by dismembering the unborn life and shattering the life of the mother who has been raped by that person. What I am simply saying is that I am answering the question and that is the proposition that the gentlewoman is proposing creates these tremendously difficult choices.

Just to make one point which can be answered based upon what premise the gentlewoman starts with, and that is if we have a life and how much value we place on that life.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I respect the gentleman, and I respect his opinion, I honestly do.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. We express our opinions on this very difficult issue.

Mrs. BOXER. But I just want to make the point so that there is no misunderstanding that a woman who is raped by the murderer of her husband will be forced to have that child, and I just want to make that the point for the record.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I have voted on this issue about 60 times, and I have to say that I have come to accept and agree with the legitimacy of the argument that in almost all circumstances Federal dollars should not be used to finance abortions.

The question is what happens to a woman who is raped or who is the victim of incest. This amendment deals only with the question of rape or incest. It does not endorse or recommend in any way abortions in those circumstances. If it did, I could not personnally support it.

My wife and I lost two babies, and I do not believe that abortion in the case of rape or incest is the answer. But as a man that is easy for me to say.

All this amendment says is that when a woman is raped or is the victim of incest, she, not I or you, should be able to make the choice in accordance with her own conscience without regard to whether she is rich or poor, if the State in which she resides allows the choice. That is all this amendment does, and reasonable people ought to be able to agree on that.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the National Right to Life Committee has called this vote the most important prolife vote of the 100th Congress. We should ask ourselves why that is, because we have cast other votes on this important and emotional issue. I suggest there are a few reasons why this vote, of all of those votes that we have cast in this Congress, is considered the most important prolife vote.

First of all, because it would make a shift in a longstanding existing policy. Particularly Members who have not had to vote on this in the past, and there are many, should understand that fact. The Hyde amendment has been the law of the land since it was passed in 1977. We have not had to vote on it in about 5 years.

We are talking about upsetting a long, well-established, and, in my judgment, proven policy.

The second reason why it is the most important prolife vote of this Congress is because the Hyde amendment is, indeed, working as planned. We used to pay, in this country, for over 300,000 abortions per year. Taxpayers, many of whom were deeply opposed to abortion for moral reasons, were forced to use their taxpayer dollars to pay for abortions. That is not happening anymore.

Furthermore, the terrible effects that were predicted by many on the initial passage of the Hyde amendment have not come to pass. Large numbers of women have not been forced to seek back-alley abortions or lose their lives because of the passage of the Hyde amendment as was predicted on its initial passage in 1977. Those problems simply did not arise.

Third, the same problems that were foreseen by many at the attempt to pass the exceptions for rape and incest back in 1977 would arise if those exceptions were written into law today.

Law enforcement officials from many parts of the country opposed the insertion of a rape-and-incest exception in 1977, and since then, because they believe it would cause large numbers of people to report false rapes, false cases of incest, in order to have the Government pay for their abortions. Even Gloria Steinem on the other side of the issue obviously said that a rape-and-incest exception alone would make many women liars. We do not want to complicate that situation, as the Congress wisely decided not to complicate it back in 1977.

Finally, this is the most important prolife vote of the year because the issue is not really rape and incest, and the issue is not really even tax dollars. The issue is life itself. After all, we do not really expect to see a large number of cases paid for under this particular provision that are genuinely the result of rape and incest.

Medical procedures are available, legal in every State, to prevent the woman recently raped or the victim of incest from conceiving a child. That is the answer to the question of the gentlewoman from California who was just involved in the debate.

All in all, it is expected that perhaps the number of abortions resulting from rape and incest may well be in the hundreds, not even in the thousands every year, and certainly not all of those wish to abort. We are talking about a very small number of cases.

The larger issue, here again, is simply the issue of life, the issue of availability of abortion, and the issue of forcing taxpayers to pay for abortions. It is against the standard of taking of a human life that all other actions, even actions as horrible as cases of rape and incest, must be judged, so we urge support for the chairman's position. We urge maintaining a standard that has been established in this country for over 10 years that says that the taxpayers are not going to be forced to pay for abortions against their will.

Mr. Speaker, I am including in the RECORD a letter from the National Right to Life Committee dated August 23, 1988:

NATIONAL RIGHT TO LIFE COMMITTEE, INC.,
Washington, DC, August 23, 1988.

Hon. VIN WEBER,
Cannon House Office Building, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE WEBER: The House will vote on the issue of Medicaid funding of abortions soon after Labor Day. The National Right to Life Committee (NRLC)—made up of 3,000 local right-to-life organizations—urges you to vote in support of the Hyde Amendment, which prohibits Medicaid funding of abortion "except where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term."

The National Right to Life Committee regards the upcoming vote on the Hyde Amendment as the most important pro-life House vote of the 100th Congress.

Because five years have passed since the House last voted on the Hyde Amendment, and because substantial distortions have been disseminated regarding recent Senate action, allow me to sketch the background of the upcoming vote.

The Hyde Amendment was first enacted, at the House's insistence, in 1976. Opponents warned that the amendment would result in many deaths and injuries at the hands of non-physician abortionists—but subsequent studies by the C.D.C. found no statistically significant increase in abortion-related mortality or morbidity attributable to the Hyde Amendment. Thanks to the Hyde Amendment, hundreds of thousands of children are alive today who would otherwise have suffered violent deaths.

When the House passed the FY 1989 Labor/HHS appropriations bill (HR 4783) on June 15, there was no challenge to the Hyde Amendment. However, on June 23 the Senate Appropriations Committee voted 15 to 14 in favor of a weakening amendment offered by Senator Weicker, to add exceptions "for the victims of rape or incest." On July 27, the full Senate voted 73 to 19 to accept an amendment offered by Sen. Exon, which narrowed the Weicker language by adding a requirement that rape or incest be "reported promptly to a law enforcement agency or public health service" in order to qualify.

Dozens of pro-life senators voted for the Exon Amendment because it was less permissive than the committee-reported language, but these senators continue to support the undiluted Hyde Amendment. Therefore, it is misleading to represent the 73 to 19 margin as evidence of "overwhelming" Senate support for weakening the Hyde Amendment, as some pro-abortion groups have done in recent form letters to House members.

The Senate-passed language is unacceptable to NRLC, because it would require the federal government to subsidize the taking of the life of an innocent human being, for reasons less grave than saving another human life. In an August 8 letter to the conferees, OMB Director James C. Miller III warned that the President's senior advisors will recommend a veto of the bill if the Senate-passed rape/incest language is not removed.

It is important to understand that the Hyde Amendment already permits emergency anti-pregnancy treatments for genuine victims of sexual assault. The current push to fund rape/incest abortions is instigated by organizations, such as the "Religious Coalition for Abortion Rights," which openly advocate unlimited federal funding of abortion. Such organizations will not be satisfied unless the federal government resumes funding abortion on demand. Prior to enactment of the Hyde Amendment in 1976, the federal Medicaid program was funding 300,000 abortions a year.

Most Americans reject the position of these pro-abortion groups that abortion is simply another "medical procedure" which should be included in tax-funded health programs. Numerous polls by major public opinion firms have demonstrated that solid majorities of Americans are opposed to taxpayer funding of abortion.

For these reasons, and others summarized on the enclosed fact sheet, please support the Hyde Amendment by voting against the motion to recede to the Senate position.

Respectfully submitted,

DOUGLAS JOHNSON,
Legislative Director.

NATIONAL RIGHT TO
Washington, DC, August 23, 1988.

SHOULD MEDICAID FUND ABORTIONS "FOR VICTIMS OF RAPE AND INCEST"?

Since 1981, the "Hyde Amendment" to the annual Labor/Health and Human Services appropriations bill has permitted federal Medicaid funding of abortions only "where the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term. The Senate-passed FY 1989 Labor/HHS appropriations bill (HR 4783) would add exceptions for rape and incest.

The Senate-passed language should be rejected for these reasons:

The current "life of the mother" exception allows abortion only when one life is balanced against another. All other "exceptions" permit taking a life for reasons less weighty than saving a life.

In cases of incest, pregnancy is usually not acknowledged until well into the second trimester—when abortion itself is a dangerous and frequently traumatic procedure. The victim of incest needs professional intervention and proper emotional support—not abortion.

When a "rape exception" was first proposed in 1977, it was opposed by the International Association of Chiefs of Police and by the National Sheriffs' Association because it would encourage false claims of rape. This would be a disservice to law enforcement agencies, and would engender skepticism regarding rape claims, to the detriment of rape victims. As feminist leader Gloria Steinem put it in a 1985 interview, "to make abortion legal only in cases of rape and incest would force women to lie" (USA Today, May 20, 1985).

In a September 6, 1984 letter to Sen. Weicker, HHS Secretary Margaret Heckler wrote: "Extending coverage for abortion to cases of rape or incest would impose new and time-consuming administrative requirements on three levels: Federal, State and provider. Additionally, administration of such a law would be extremely difficult . . . whether a pregnancy resulted from rape or incest is a legal question, not a medical determination which can be made by a physician. In sum, the amendment could impose upon the Medicaid program an onerous legal and judgmental dimension, not congruent with the program's purpose."

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VOLKMER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman for his remarks, especially in regard to the question on law enforcement.

What we have here is a potential of making law enforcement look at people, ladies, when they come in, and/or girls when they come in and complain of a rape, the question of whether there actually was rape, whether they should go out and investigate, or is this just for the purposes of getting an abortion funded, that has been something that law enforcement has been very concerned about, and I think everyone should be concerned about, because I think rape is one of the most heinous crimes there is. Yet to then turn around and say that we should relegate that to the fact that is a way to get an abortion because that is what is going to happen, as the gentleman said, even Gloria Steinem has commented what we are trying to do basically with the opposition is to make liars out of women so that they can get an abortion funded by the Government.

I commend the gentleman, and I, too, urge the Members of the House to vote "aye" on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1¾ minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Exon amendment, to allow Medicaid funding for abortion services in cases of rape and incest. This amendment would allow Federal funding of abortions only in promptly reported cases of rape and incest and contains a State's rights provision to allow each State to determine whether it will fund abortions in cases of sexual assault.

The justice campaign, a national campaign to secure public funding for abortion for the victims of rape and incest, is made up of representatives of a number of religions, including Hebrew, Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist, Unitarian, and Presbyterian congregations. The vast majority of the American public supports this coverage—even many who support the Roe versus Wade decision. Polls taken over the last 15 years indicate that 8 in 10 Americans believe abortion should be an available option for women who have been the victims of sexual assault.

Poor women who are pregnant as a result of rape or incest—victims of brutal acts—should have access to the same health care options as more affluent women. I urge my colleagues to join the justice campaign to preserve the Senate language in supporting the Exon amendment to H.R. 4783.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Senate's position.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this summer, our colleagues in the other body did a courageous thing.

By voting to provide Federal funding for abortions in promptly reported cases of rape and incest, the other body was only trying to put into law the views of the vast majority of Americans. The time has come for the House of Representatives to do the same thing.

Recent surveys show that 81 percent of Americans believe abortion services should be available to women who become pregnant as a result of sexual assault.

As today's Washington Post's editorial points out,

> Even among those who disagree with the Supreme Court's decision in Roe versus Wade, a majority would probably accept an exception for cases of rape and incest. And for poor women in 36 States, finding the money to exercise their rights when they have been the victims of brutality is a terrible problem. A vote to allow the use of Federal funds in these special cases would provide a modest and badly needed assistance to women in great need.

Mr. Speaker, for the first time since 1979, we have the opportunity to do the decent and humane thing.

I urge a "no" vote.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to our good friend, the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate all of my colleagues for the high tone of this debate. We do not seem to be talking past one another any longer on this issue. We seem to be reaching out to understand one another's position.

One of the most incredible acts of political courage I have ever seen was on America's most-watched television show "60 Minutes." Our current President, Ronald Reagan was pressed forcefully but politely by one of the star interviewers of our era, Mike Wallace on this issue of rape/incest and abortion. It was not a direct question. Mike Wallace simply was probing for one of those confessions from a politician. He said: "Mr. President, what is the biggest mistake you have ever made in political life?" I immediately, as a politician, like a baseball player will anticipate a move, I answered in my mind: "Oh, that is for my opponents to tell you. I would rather talk about some of the good things I have done." The President did not say that. He said, and this is almost verbatim: "Mike, that is easy. The biggest mistake I ever made was my first year as Governor of California when I did not really understand in depth the issue of abortion." President Reagan was refering to a bill that bore the name of one of our distinguished colleagues here, Mr. BEILENSON, a good friend of mine who is on the opposite side of the issue. Mr. BEILENSON was in the State senate in California at that time. President Reagan went on and said: "The Beilenson bill came up in California. I signed it to allow abortion for rape and incest.

"And I didn't realize what I was doing. I opened a Pandora's box." And he said: "And what's happened ever since has been a national scandal." He said it was used as an excuse for unlimited abortion on demand for every cause, and that is the problem that faces this House today.

The rape problem is as tough as we can get on this issue. I happen to have a personal friend whose daughter was raped at noon on a college campus. I believe it was at the instigation of one of America's slimiest pornographers, who offered $400 the night before the rape to anybody who could get a story on my friend's daughter. She was pulled off of the parking lot and into the bushes, and she was raped by three or four students, she cannot remember exactly. The next night her father, who is a nationally known official, held a press conference and said that we have done everything that we can to avoid this pregnancy that our church will allow. He said that: "If my daughter ends up pregnant, she told me from the hospital that she wants to have the baby. She will not commit an act of violence when there is no capital punishment for the men who raped her in an act of violence."

I applaud the cause of Joan Andrews, who I think is a martyr. She is taking her legal punishment for unplugging one of these suction pieces of equipment in modern American life that tears a living child from its mother's womb, and spins the aborted baby into a gel in one of these whirling, razor blade machines.

At a press conference on behalf of Joan Andrews, our colleague, CHRIS SMITH spoke so eloquently that I would like to repeat his beautiful words:

> I believe that abortion on demand is a national scandal, that historians will some day come to regard as an odd mixture of curiosity, of sorrow, of incredulity, and contempt for they will wonder how a society that paid so much attention to civil rights at home and to human rights abroad on both sides of our aisle, that this Nation would allow, even promote the deaths of millions of preborn young children. They will wonder how an ostensibly sane, enlightened and compassionate society could have been so thoroughly fooled, and they will marvel at the congressional acquiescence in this gristly business.

Not this House, Mr. Speaker, Maybe the other body, the U.S. Senate, but not in this Chamber, not on September 9. We will overwhelmingly reject the Senate's elitist approach to this tragic, complicated aspect of the prolife abortion problem.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE].

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to insist on the House position.

And I do so, Mr. Speaker, as a Member who has opposed Federal funding of abortion on demand. I subscribed to the notion that the Federal Government should not bear the responsibility to fund abortions for women who chose—who chose—not to take proper precautions.

Rather, it is a question of a woman taking responsibility for her own actions, no matter what income level.

But instances occur, tragic instances, when the choice is taken out of the woman's hands—more accurately, when it is violently and brutally taken from her. A woman who has been raped, or who is the victim of incest, faces enormous physical and emotional consequences. And these are consequences that simply are not of her own making.

Yet women of economic means who have thus suffered have options which we currently deny to low-income women. They have choices in this hideous circumstance that are now withheld. We have made income and economic status the basis by which women contend with the aftermath of rape or incest—as if falling victim to those crimes were not degrading enough.

In this debate, Mr. Speaker, we have spoken in the dispassionate terminology of legislatures as to what lower-income women are being forced to do and contend with. Yet the cruel and agonizing reality of their fate is far removed from such debate.

Further, there is a great deal of talk about "rights," about who has what kind and what take precedence. I would suggest, rather, that we should speak not of rights but of obligations. And there is an obligation in our society toward a rape victim, toward the victim of incest, to provide the basic array of choices in these horrifying circumstances regardless of income.

To preclude women, in the wake of the crudest and most degrading of crimes, from recovering from those crimes simply on the basis of economics goes from the realm of unfairness toward base cruelty.

I urge my colleagues to defeat the motion to insist on the House position.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the centrist Senate compromise on this matter, and it is important for Members to realize that the 19 opponents in the Senate were made up of Members on both sides of this issue who could not compromise.

This is really an opportunity to add a small element of compassion to the Hyde amendment, and I mean a small one. Statistics show us that in 1986, 90,000 cases of rape occurred in the United States, and over 100,000 cases of child abuse, some of which were incest. Yet in 1979, the last year in which we were able to gather data on this prior to the enactment of the Hyde amendment, only 72 people qualified for this form of Federal assistance. So we are not talking about an awful lot of people.

But we are talking about a very important principle, and that is why I think the demeanor of this debate is so important.

As the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA] said, we are requiring prompt reporting of the crime. This is not a new loophole that people will be able to use to violate the broader Hyde amendment. We are giving the States local control to make decisions about whether they wish to use their State Medicaid funds for this purpose.

But I think we have overlooked one fundamental issue, and that is the question of economic justice. We all know that under the law currently in this country women who wish to have an abortion can have one. I do not think very many of us who are in the affluent element of our society realize what a burden this can be to poor people. An abortion today could cost half the family's monthly income for people who qualify for AFDC, the people we are talking about here today, that 20 percent of our society or less who will fall into the lower-income bracket.

We are talking about economic justice. If the Constitution says that is one of our purposes of being here, if we have said in adherence to the Supreme Court rulings like Roe versus Wade that this abortion concept can exist in our society, we cannot allow this disparity to continue. I ask my colleagues to support the Senate compromise.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my good friend, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the House-passed version of the Hyde amendment in the Labor-Health and Human Services-

Education appropriations bill. Since 1981, the House has steadfastly stood by its stated belief that abortion should not be federally funded. The sole exception is a circumstance in which the life of the mother would be endangered by the pregnancy or the birth. The House should not reverse its position today.

I stand firmly committed to protecting the rights of the unborn. There is a certain dignity in human life which we must respect, for it is the foundation of each and every basic value we hold dear, and the Federal Government should not fund a practice which directly contradicts our respect for life.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, it has been mentioned a number of times on the floor that this is a very narrow kind of compromise. It applies in a very limited number of cases, only on two occasions, after reporting, and the States can undo everything that we might do here today.

I would like to suggest that this is not abortion on demand. It has nothing to do with abortion rights. That matter is determined elsewhere. What we are talking about is whether a poor woman has the same opportunity in the United States as a rich woman. All we are talking about is whether there is an opportunity for the poor to be treated the same way as the rich.

It seems to me that if we have any dedication to equality in this House that we have no other course than to support the Senate amendment.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me as I rise today in support of Senate language providing Medicaid funded abortions for women whose pregnancy results from rape or incest.

It is ironic and tragic that Medicaid, the very program which was created to provide necessary medical care to poor women, has been transformed into a program that denies poor women who are pregnant access to all available medical options. Poor women who are victims of the brutal crimes of rape or incest should have access to the same legal rights to abortion as other women in our society. Denying them access to these services is nothing but a policy of discrimination against the poor.

In 36 States in this country, no public funds are available to help women whose pregnancies are the result of violence and assault. In an ideal world, abortions would not be necessary. Unfortunately, in the real world, the brutal realities of crimes of aggression such as rape and incest occur with alarming frequency. We have the opportunity today to assist some women on the long road to regaining control of their lives. It is unfair, unreasonable and inhumane to deny them this assistance. I urge my colleagues to oppose any measures to weaken the Senate language restoring Medicaid funding for abortions for women victimized by rape and incest.

Mr. Speaker, I come from a culture as an Italian American, Roman Catholic mother of 5 children of my own who worships children. This has nothing do, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] said, with the question of abortion, but it is a question of fairness, and a question of not denying people their rights.

I ask every Member of this body to examine his or her conscience and say if any one of our children or spouses of male Members were confronted with this circumstance of rape or incest, would they deny that member of their family the opportunity to every medical option. I do not think the time is now for hypocrisy, but it is a time to really face the reality and truth of the situation, and not deny to women, just because they lack the financial resources, the same medical options we reserve for our own families and our own spouses.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I also yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues from both sides of the aisle for this opportunity to speak on what I consider to be a very, very important matter. Preceding speakers have spoken eloquently to the fact that this is not abortion on demand that we are talking about. This is rather an issue of equity and a deeply human right, which at times life demands that we be allowed to exercise from the deepest reservoirs of our own individual being.

This amendment does not offer abortion on demand. It talks only about incest and rape. It is narrowly drawn. It is thoughtfully drawn with the States rights provisions and the other sections that have been mentioned today.

But what it talks about is not narrow. Rape is not a narrow experience.

Rape is being in fear for your life. Rape is being violently subdued.

Picture your daughter, picture your own wife, picture the terror, picture the pain. I ask Members to take unto yourselves the full responsibility for this vote. I ask Members to know that with a knife at your throat, with fear in your heart, maybe an hour, maybe over an hour, an experience of such extraordinary brutality, and under those circumstances to be penetrated. Yes, we are not talking about assault and battery. Rape is not assault and battery. It is penetration.

Men and women experience this situation very differently. Penetration is different than penetrating.

And that is part of what this is all about. I will tell you that if your 13-year-old daughter—I have three daughters—but picture your sobbing 13-year-old daughter in your arms convulsed in terror and anguish, are you going to ask her day after day to relive that experience? Are you going to make that decision for her? Can every man in the House of Representatives take upon themselves as this moment the right and responsibility to make this kind of decision for every poor woman and child—yes, child—in America?

This bill is about incest. Now, who commits incest? Who is the victim of incest? Female children.

I appreciate the time allotted to me, because I do think this is no ordinary matter. I think—I hope that I have made that plain. We are only asking that under extraordinary, brutal, deeply human situations that that woman, that child, be allowed the same choice as your wife, or your child, because you can pay for it, and because you have the power to choose.

Believe me, rape is not something that is over when it is finished. It is not done when it is done. It is with you the rest of your life. These choices are not choices than can be taken on in the well of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 5 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER], of course, has his 10 minutes to close.

Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to yield time?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve my 5 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, the last 4 minutes during which we heard the statement of the lady from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON] constitutes the 4 most deeply moving minutes that I have spent in this Congress in the last 20 years. I must say that all of the debate from both sides of this issue has been thoughtful, has been deeply felt and has dignified this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I only have a minute. We have heard that abortion is an assault on an innocent unborn life, we have heard that abortion is the taking of a human life, that the issue of life itself is what we are talking about, and that the fetus is a human being.

We have heard that abortion has a corrosive effect on the fabric of society, it takes an innocent life.

However, there is another view to consider. There is the view that I adhere to, the view that abortion is not the taking of human life but a sublime humanitarian act that, in this case, will ease the suffering of human beings.

This does not mean that I am antilife. I and my colleagues who support a woman's right to choose also support life-sustaining legislation. My colleagues, when you are asked if you are prolife, give them the record of life-sustaining legislation you have supported this year.

Tell them what you are doing to lower the abysmally high infant mortality rate in this country. Point to the health care programs you have supported to curb fatal diseases among the Nation's 37 million citizens without basic health services.

The Children's Defense Fund cited 10 House votes this year as being critical to the physical, mental, and spiritual health of the Nation's children. The bills provided for food, clothing, shelter, education, and health care for children. These are true life-sustaining bills.

Many religious organizations, including the U.S. Presbyterian Church, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, and the United Church of Christ, support the Exon amendment. Seventy percent of Americans in a Lou Harris poll, commissioned by Planned Parenthood, believe that abortion in this circumstance is acceptable. Our colleagues in the Senate passed the amendment by an overwhelming vote of 73 to 19.

Furthermore, in every single developed nation in the world, with the exception of Ireland, abortion for rape and incest victims is legal. This includes Spain, Italy, and France, three of the most Catholic countries in the world. Not only is abortion legal in this instance, but it has been since the early 1930's.

If a victim of sexual assault wants to terminate her pregnancy she should have that right—regardless of her financial circumstances. Congress should not stand between a woman and her body, especially in cases of rape and incest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, in fairness, we only have two minutes to close. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER] is going to have 10 minutes to close and I, therefore, would like to have the balance of the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] yielded first so that I could then recognize the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. CONTE. I was reserving my five minutes for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] so that he may close, and I do not intend to yield to any other Member.

Mr. HOYER. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts and appreciate the attempt of the gentleman to be fair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. HOYER. It is, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, to close debate on our side, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Speaker, for the last 15 years in virtually ever public opinion poll in this country, the overwhelming majority of Americans have supported the right of rape and incest victims to choose to end the pregnancy that results from that rape or that incest. That is what the polls say.

But today the law of the land is not in step with nor does it represent the mainstream thinking of the American public. The law that this Congress has mistakenly created says that a victim of criminal rape must bear the rapist's child. I think, Mr. Speaker, that not only a majority of Americans, but a majority of the Members of this House honestly, in the bottom of their hearts, believe that is a gross denial of justice.

Rape and incest cases are increasing across this country. Many of those victims of violent sexual assault are young women who are poor and who depend on the Federal Government for their well being and the health care.

Now some of my colleagues have said that a woman who has been victimized once by conceiving against her will should be also victimized again by her own government and be forced to deliver against her will. Mr. Speaker, I ask, and my colleagues on our side ask for simple compassion. Surely Members of this body think that women are more than incubators for rapists and criminals and perpetrators of incest. If you do believe as we do, you will accept the Senate revision. It exempts rape and incest victims and it requires cases of rape and incest to be promptly reported and that states agree to accept the funds.

These provisions assure that claims of rape and incest are legitimate and that the opportunity for fraud is minimized. These provisions give State governments the option to participate in the policy decisions. And most importantly, it leaves to a violently impregnated woman the moral right to choose for herself whether or not she will deliver the criminal rapist's child.

In the name of compassion, in the name of justice for woman who have suffered enough, I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the motion and to accept the Senate provision.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield my remaining 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say parenthetically something that the last speaker said about bearing the child of a criminal rapist, that strikes me as the Scarlet Letter, as though the innocent child, the second victim of the rape, somehow must bear the stigma of the criminal act of the father. I have difficulty following the logic of that.

Now we have heard in some painful detail the emotional trauma of what a rape can mean. Let me also say that incest is a form of rape, only it is within the family. Let me say also abortion does not cure that family's situation. Something more has to be done to get the poor victim of the incest away from the perpetrator of the incest and abortion does not go to that at all.

But I think to understand fully this soul-wrenching issue, let us focus for a moment away from the woman, just for a moment, and look at the other victim, the unborn child, and let us try to figure out what an abortion does to that child.

Now it is not a tonsillectomy, it is not an appendectomy; by definition, by intention it is the killing, the killing of an innocent, an innocent human life.

Thomas More when he was beheaded by Henry VIII is noted for a famous line. He said to the axman, "Be careful of my beard, it hath committed no treason." So as his head was cut off, he wanted his beard to maintain its dignity; "it hath committed no treason."

The little baby has not committed a crime, a rape, the little baby is an innocently inconvenient victim along with the victimized woman.

The law protected the rapist. The Supreme Court has said, "You may not impose capital punishment on a rapist." This is cruel and unusual punishment. But you are saying to exterminate, not terminate, a pregnancy—every pregnancy terminates at the end of nine months—exterminate this innocently inconvenient residual of the rape, the product of the rape, the consequence of the rape. Visit on that innocent child the penalty the law will not visit on the rapist. This is really, really what you are saying.

Now let us stipulate on compassion. Let us stipulate—I will, I stipulate that Mr. Hoyer, Nancy Johnson, Vic Fazio, everybody has an abundance of compassion. How can you not? We are talking about one of the most traumatic situations in literature, in life. But stipulate, please, that we have compassion too. We have what we like to think is more than a one-dimensional compassion, a compassion that extends beyond sympathy and bleeding for and with and weeping with the victim of the rape, but extends to the innocently inconvenient consequence of that rape.

We want to enlarge the circle of persons for whom society will be responsible, to include within that circle of protection the little stranger, the little intruder who through no fault of his or her own has been made a party to this terribly criminal act. Rape is not over when it is finished, that is right, oh, that is right. But neither is abortion.

Abortion is terminal, abortion is killing.

Now no one, not even a woman who has been raped, God bless her and help her, and we help her and bless her, but nobody has the right to kill another innocent life, nobody. And no circumstances give that God-like power to anybody.

I have heard "picture your own wife or daughter." OK, fair enough. Now I am going to give you a picture, a little newborn baby that you are holding in your arms, think of that when you vote on this issue and ask yourself if you can be an accessory to exterminating that little child because his father committed a crime.

That is as real a picture for you to form in your mind as anything else. It is a matter of focus, of emphasis.

I ask you to extend your compassion to that abstraction that you cannot see, you cannot touch it because it is in the mother's womb, that tiny child of transcendent human value surrounded by a woman who has been victimized but who indeed is a mother.

In the fullest sense of the term, this is a human rights issue and you have in all of these situations conflicting rights, conflicting rights. You have the right of the first victim to have her body free from the consequences of a criminal act of rape. That is over here.

And over here you have the very right to life, itself, the right to live of the second victim, the unborn.

Now when rape and incest occur, a great injustice occurs, an enormous, monstrous, inhumane, humiliating, brutal injustice occurs. In all honesty, I cannot say other than that forcing a woman to carry to term the child of the rapist is anything but a terrible injustice.

But that having been said, must we visit another injustice on top of that? Must we superimpose that on this crime of rape by destroying in the womb an innocent preborn child? It is not a tumor, it is not a bad tooth or swollen tonsils. That little microscopic entity is a tiny member of the human family that has committed no treason, has committed no crime, and we must perform an act of virtue, some act of will to transfer due process and the equal protection of the law to the second victim, because that is the second victim. But it is a far greater injustice to kill the child, superimposing that injustice on the injustice of the rape.

We cannot avoid injustice in a rape situation. We cannot avoid injustice in an incest situation. We can ameliorate, we can mitigate, we can help, we can nurture, we can alleviate, but we cannot escape injustice. But why must we compound the injustice by adding to it the extermination of an innocent human life, one that cannot rise up on the street, cannot speak out, cannot defend himself or herself, and cannot escape?

The injustice of rape lasts at least nine months. It is a terrible injustice, but it can be helped psychologically, financially, and spiritually. But abortion is the second injustice. There is the taking of a life, and there is no help for that. There is no remedy for that.

Interestingly enough, we have heard very few statistics on this. We have heard some from the gentleman from Oregon, ambiguous, I must say, and the reason is that there are not any. It is very hard to find out from anybody how many pregnancies result from rape and incest. The answer is that there are very, very few.

Now, on the economic argument that a poor woman should have the advantages of a rich woman, may I suggest that Planned Parenthood gets millions of taxpayer dollars from this Government. Let them pick up the cost for the very few who insist on exterminating their young. They should not make us accessories. They should not make us a part of that double tragedy of rape and exterminating an unborn child.

There are very, very few such pregnancies in this country. We cannot get the statistics. There are studies I can quote for the Members that say it almost never happens. But I must suggest to Members that we should let Planned Parenthood pay for those who insist on punishing the child for the crime of the father. Why must the Federal Government supply the only answer and be an accessory in the extermination of an innocent life?

These are poor women, yes. But there are poor babies. They are defenseless, defenseless babies.

Ethel Waters was a great black actress who passed away a few years ago. She played a famous role in "Cabin in the Sky." I do not know whether many remember it; perhaps only I do, but perhaps some who are a little older will remember it also. She was a great lady, a great person, and she wrote a book about her life that she called "His Eye is on the Sparrow." She said, "My father raped by mother when she was 12, and now they are dedicating a park to me in Chester, Pennsylvania."

Out of great, great tragedy some good can come.

Let me just leave the Members with something that was said by Sam Levinson, the comedian, some years ago. Levinson said, "I believe that each newborn child arrives on Earth with a message to deliver to mankind. Clenched in his little fist is some particle of yet unrevealed truth, some missing clue which may solve the enigma of man's destiny." He has a limited amount of time to fulfill his mission, and he will never get a second chance. Nor will we. He may be our last hope. He must be treated as top sacred.

So as the Members vote on this—and it is not easy—let us not accuse anybody of lacking compassion. Let us consider focusing our compassion beyond what we see and touch and hear and take into consideration the abstract, this little atom of humanity, defenseless and innocent, and let us know that while rape is a terrible thing, an abortion is worse, because rape, with all of its horror, is not killing. Where there is life surely there is hope. But abortion terminates a life, and one of those little lives might have found the secret to cancer, to multiple sclerosis, to world peace; one of those little lives that is now thrown out like a crushed empty beer can.

Mr. Speaker, it is a tough vote. But I plead with the Members to support the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Natcher] and support the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Conte], who have been like Gibraltars on this issue for years. They are responsible for saving many babies. Yes, the unborn of the rich are at risk. We cannot save them if their mother's want an abortion, because they can go out and buy one. But if we can save the unborn of the poor, occasionally, that is no small achievement.

Mr. DeFazio. Mr. Speaker I want to commend the Senate for adopting the Exon amendment which allows Medicaid funding to terminate a pregnancy that is the result of rape or incest in cases that are promptly reported to a law enforcement agency or public health service.

It is an outrage that the victims of brutal physical and mental assault have to carry an unwanted pregnancy to term because they are dependent upon the Federal Government for their health care. For most economically disadvantaged women health care options and choices about abortion are available only if they are financed through programs such as Medicaid.

While the Exon amendment would be a step forward in what has been a backward approach to this issue, the "promptly" reported language in the amendment is a disservice to a majority of the women it's supposed to benefit. We are just beginning to realize the alarmingly high incidence of incest. These cases are rarely "promptly" reported. The young victims live in a daily environment of fear, confusion, anger and helplessness. They are unable to defend themselves from the perpetrator and are often led to believe that the situation is their fault. We cannot expect these young women to come forward seeking assistance when we send a message, "don't come knocking on the door of the Federal Government for help if you're poor."

The overwhelming majority of public opinion polls over the past 15 years have found that eight in 10 Americans support availability of abortions for sexually assaulted women. In 1978, my home State of Oregon was the first State to vote on a ballot initiative that would have prohibited the use of public funds for abortions. That measure was defeated. In 1986, the question again appeared on the ballot and the voters again opposed it. Clearly, restricting the availability of abortions for these victims is not the policy that most Americans want.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my collegues to reconsider this discriminatory policy and, at the very least, allow the use of Federal funds to provide abortion services to poor women who are the victims of sexual assault. I urge my colleagues to vote no on the House language.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my strong support of the motion to agree to the Senate provision on abortion funding to the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education appropriations conference report for fiscal year 1989. By restoring Federal funding to abortion in the cases of rape and incest, this provision would begin to redress the gross injustices of our current abortion laws.

In 1973, the Supreme Court affirmed that it is a woman's constitutional right to end a pregnancy in its early stages. Yet over the 15 years since then, the Congress has enacted a series of measures that have denied poor women this constitutional right. We cannot continue a policy that condemns women to the trauma of bringing an unwanted child into the world, or to a back alley abortionist, simply because she does not have enough money for a safe abortion.

Mr. Speaker, a woman should have the freedom to make her own decision about a pregnancy that is the result of violence and assault. The highest court in our land has affirmed that right. But the issue before us today is a question of resources and rights. Our Government is straddled with an abortion policy that discriminates against the poor, and we are now presented with the opportunity to remedy this travesty.

Congress has an obligation to assure equality of health care to all our citizens, and I urge my colleagues to join in supporting the motion to restore Federal funding for abortion in the case of rape and incest.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 216, nays 166, not voting 49, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. FOLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to advise the Members of the House on the schedule for the remainder of the day.

We had hoped to conclude business by 3 o'clock this afternoon, but that has not been possible. We do have an important bill relating to the Chicago rail situation involving a labor dispute which must be acted on today. That will be the next order of business.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN] will ask unanimous consent to consider the matter in the House, and although a vote is possible, we assume that there will not be a vote on that, but that is again a matter that has to be determined by floor action.

Following that, there will be motions to go to conference on a public health block grant from the Committee on Energy and Commerce and two bills from the Appropriations Committee, the fiscal year 1989 foreign operations export financing, and related program appropriation bill, and the Rural Development Agriculture appropriation bill for fiscal year 1989. That will conclude the business of the House for today and for the week.

Members should be advised again that there is a possibility of a vote coming up on the rail bill. We hope that it will not occur. We do not expect any votes that we know of. We have consulted with the Republican side on this matter with relation to those bills that are being sent to conference.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman from Washington, I would hope that the gentleman could communicate to us or suggest to us that the debate on the railroad bill will be a very brief debate if the Members cooperate.

Mr. FOLEY. It is our expectation that it will be very brief, indeed. I know of no controversy about the legislation.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 1579, PREVENTIVE HEALTH BLOCK GRANTS REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1579) to amend the Public Health Service Act to revise and extend the Block Grant Program, and for other purposes, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DINGELL, WAXMAN, SCHEUER, LENT, and MADIGAN.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 374, PROVIDING FOR SETTLEMENT OF LABOR-MANAGEMENT DISPUTE BETWEEN CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN TRANSPORTATION CO. AND UNITED TRANSPORTATION UNION

Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 374) to provide for a settlement of the labor-management dispute between the Chicago & Northwestern Transportation Co., and the United Transportation Union, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House and that the previous question be ordered to final passage without intervening motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CRANE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to object any more than I intended to object last time we took this up for debate. I will not make my comments prolix, but I do want to register an objection in the form of opposition to what we are doing here.

It is a face-saving device for a union leader who has refused to make concessions, and that union leader is going to get off the hook by blaming the Federal Government for intervening to resolve an issue that should have found its resolution in the private sector between labor and management.

I think everyone is conversant with the concessions that the Chicago & Northwestern have already made. They agreed to the terms that the Emergency Board set forth and those terms are going to effect still a cost of about $35 million to the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, which has been losing $50 million a year because of the featherbedding practices; but I do want to alert my colleagues that it is my intention, after others have spoken to this issue, to ask for a recorded vote on it.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WHITTAKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will not object to the gentleman's request; however, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee for an explanation of the legislation that is before us, and I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS A. LUKEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Senate Joint Resolution 374, which the House is now considering, is to settle a long-standing labor-management dispute between the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad and the United Transportation Union. This dispute is over "crew consist"; that is, the size of train crews.

The Chicago & Northwestern currently operates with four-man crews—an engineer, a conductor, the two brakemen. The railroad has contended that it can in most cases operate with only two-man crews, just as many of its competitors' trains are operated. Most importantly, CNW's financial condition is such that it must have relief from current crew consist rules in order to survive in the long run.

However, the reduction in crew size was opposed by the UTU, which insisted on maintaining four-man crews.

The CNW initiated formal collective bargaining on its crew size proposal on May 15, 1987. It followed the procedures mandated by the Railway Labor Act, including collective bargaining, mediation, and, finally, submission of the dispute to a Presidential Emergency Board, which was appointed in an attempt to resolve the issue.

In a decision issued on July 1, 1988, the Emergency Board issued its report and recommendations. The Board ruled that CNW could reduce to three-man crews under certain circumstances. The Emergency Board also granted to employees who resign voluntarily a severance payment of $50,000. Employees who are laid off involuntarily would receive $45,000.

The Emergency Board's ruling is not binding, however. Following the Board's decision, the parties had 30 days to continue to negotiate. Negotiations failed, and on August 4, 1988, when the statutory cooling-off period ended, the UTU went on strike.

On the same day, the House passed Senate Joint Resolution 356, which extended the cooling off period to midnight, last night. Unfortunately, the dispute is still not settled and at 9 this morning CNW management unilaterally cut the size of its train crews. The UTU promptly went on strike, and the entire railroad was shut down.

Some 40,000 commuters in the Chicago area have been stranded without rail service. And shippers along thousands of miles of rail lines in the Midwest are without alternative transportation. This is particularly a hardship for grain farmers who have no other economical way to get their product to market.

The effect of the resolution we are now considering would be to end the strike and to make binding on the parties the recommendations of the Presidential Emergency Board. It is a last resort, and is being considered only after all other avenues for settlement have been exhausted.

This legislation is important to thousands of people and businesses in the Midwest. It enjoys strong bipartisan support I urge my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. WHITTAKER. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us, already approved by the other body, is intended to resolve the continuing labor dispute on a major midwestern railroad, the Chicago & Western. At the outset, I want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Transportation Subcommittee, and the gentleman from Michigan, chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee, for their efforts to assure prompt consideration of this legislation.

In early August, the Congress enacted legislation to provide an additional cooling off period, beyond the normal procedures of the Railway Labor Act, to allow every possible opportunity for a private sector settlement of this matter through collective bargaining. Unfortunately, no agreement has been forthcoming, and the cooling off period expired this morning. We are therefore again faced with the prospect of a rail strike that will strand thousands of Chicago commuters and halt critically needed rail service to many midwestern farm communities at the height of the harvest season. In these circumstances, the preference of many Members, myself included, for private sector resolution of labor disputes must yield to the broader public interest in preserving essential rail service for the Midwest.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I had sincerely hoped that this legislation would be unnecessary, because the Presidential Emergency Board's report, issued in July, had provided the parties with the basic outlines of a sensible compromise on the key issue of crew size. Nevertheless, there appear to be elements who, for whatever reason, want Congress to take them "off the hook" through legislation, and who therefore have prevented the reaching of any final agreement. If it were not for the consequences of a strike on innocent third parties—shippers, commuters, farmers—I would rather have those who have frustrated the collective bargaining process bear the consequences of their own irresponsibility. I cannot take that course, however, because too much of the price would be paid by innocent bystanders who have had no control over the bargaining process.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, follows the pattern adopted by the Congress in 1986 when the New England region was threatened by a loss of rail service during the Maine Central strike. After cooling off legislation had failed to produce a settlement, the Congress adopted the recommendations of the Presidential Emergency Board as a binding settlement, with a backup arbitration procedure to settle any differences over the meaning or implementation of the Board's recommendations. That pattern is essentially repeated in the resolution we are considering today.

This legislation is a narrowly targeted solution to a specific dispute. The settlement terms mandated by this resolution were not created out of whole cloth by the Congress, but were instead recommended by an expert body, the Presidential Emergency Board appointed this past spring. Therefore, I believe that the legislation represents the bare minimum of Federal involvement in developing the actual terms of the collective-bargaining settlement.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to note that legislation such as this should be the rare exception, not the rule. If both sides act responsibly in the collective-bargaining process, action by the Congress should be unnecessary in most instances. It is my fervent hope that, as the railroads and their employees continue to adjust to their new, less regulated environment, they will make the changes that are dictated by economic necessity through genuine bargaining, not by mere posturing in front of a perceived congressional backstop.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRUCE].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. There is a reservation pending on the part of the gentleman from Kansas, and as soon as that is resolved, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to lose my right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's right will be protected.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Today in Chicago, a labor strike is presently existing on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad which imposes an unfair burden on commuters and the commuter rail system with whom there is really no dispute.

This Congress previously has granted a 36-day cooling-off period to allow both sides to reach an amicable settlement. They were afforded adequate time to do that. They recognized their own interests, and they recognized the responsibility they had to the citizens and businesses of northeastern Illinois. We are all disappointed that there was not a settlement reached by both parties, but we are pleased that in negotiations throughout last evening, both labor and management agreed to postpone the operation of the strike until 9 o'clock in Chicago so that the morning commuter trains could run.

The CNW initiated formal collective-bargaining on this concept of crew size on May 15, 1987, and both the CNW and the UTU have followed procedures mandated by the Rail Labor Act including bargaining, mediation, and submission of this dispute to the Presidential Emergency Board, all required by law.

On July 1, 1988, the Emergency Board issued its report and its recommendations, and both parties have worked since then to resolve whatever disputes there were.

Thirty-six days ago this Congress gave additional time. What does the Presidential Board allow? For those who are concerned about the labor union's interest in this particular agreement, 350 jobs are maintained by the PEB agreement. From the original call of more than 1,100 lost jobs, we saved 350. For every person separated involuntarily, $45,000 cash payment will be made by the railroad. For each gentleman that leaves this railroad voluntarily, a $50,000 one-time cash payment.

We have worked with everyone from Fred Hardin, the international president, to Don Margraf, the general chairman, Bob Schmiege, the president of Chicago & Northwestern, and no one likes the agreement, but everyone has a resigned attitude that this is the only way they are going to resolve their dispute. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dingell], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Thomas A. Luken], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Porter], Mr. Paul Simon in the Senate, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Michel], and the Governor called from Europe this week trying to maintain the negotiations, Fred Hardin, the international president, everyone is resigned to the fact that it is up to the Congress of the United States to implement the Emergency Board recommendations.

Do that today and make sure that 41,000 commuters tomorrow morning can go back to work in Chicago.

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to the adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is reserving the right to object.

Mr. WHITTAKER. Mr. Speaker, I had a reservation. I have not released my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's right will be protected. The gentleman from Kansas is proceeding under a reservation earlier expressed.

Mr. WHITTAKER. Mr. Speaker, that is correct.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dingell].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I support the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Senate Joint Resolution 374, which will end the pending dispute between the United Transportation Union [UTU] and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad [CNW].

Today's action is necessary if we are to avert a substantial and costly disruption of vital commerce. If we fail to act, we will cripple more than 40,000 commuters in the Chicago area who rely on CNW to get to work every day. We will also impose terrible hardship on thousands of farmers who, as the harvest season begins, are relying on CNW to get their grain to market.

Several members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce deserve recognition for their efforts over the last 6 weeks to avert an interruption of rail service in the Midwest. Foremost among them is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Bruce], who should be commended for his tireless efforts in encouraging the parties to reach an agreement and, when the parties were not able to do so, in obtaining swift congressional action. I also want to recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Tauke], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madigan], and his colleague from Illinois [Mr. Collins] for their efforts. Finally, the leadership of the chairman and ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Messrs. Luken and Whittaker, should also be noted.

It is regrettable that Congress once again has been required to step into the collective-bargaining process and impose a settlement on the parties. Thus, I believe it is important for the Members to understand the peculiar circumstances that have led us to this point.

As many of you know, a three-member Presidential Emergency Board recommended terms for settlement of this dispute in early July. Ordinarily, had the parties not been able to reach agreement by the time a 30-day moratorium on self-help expired in early August, Congress would have acted immediately to impose the terms of that Board's recommendation. Instead, at the request of the UTU, we extended that cooling-off period for another 36 days in the hope that an agreement could finally be reached.

The best way in which an agreement could have been reached would have been for UTU's general chairman on the CNW to request the assistance of the international president in negotiating a settlement—which the general chairman has the right to do under the UTU constitution. However, that request was never made, and in the absence of a request, the union's president had no authority to intervene. This is unfortunate, because I have good reason to believe that an agreement could have been reached which would have been more favorable to the employees of the CNW than that recommended by the Emergency Board.

By imposing the Board's recommendations, we continue our longstanding and important tradition of not allowing the parties to a rail labor dispute to expect that they can get a better deal from Congress than from the Emergency Board or from negotiations amongst themselves. I hope that in the future other carriers and employee organizations will bear this in mind.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take this opportunity to make a few observations on what we are about to do. We are about to legislate a specific solution to a collective bargaining dispute between a company and one of its unions.

Now, while it would perhaps be unprecedented for Congress to take such action with respect to most industries, it has become almost routine policy for Congress to intervene in rail labor disputes.

Indeed, Congress has intervened in rail labor disputes several times during the current administration—an administration that has fervently preached the gospel of free enterprise free of government intervention. This is especially so in the labor-management area, a gospel perhaps best exemplified by the administration's opposition to plant closing legislation.

For example, in 1982, Congress imposed a contract to resolve a labor dispute between the Nation's railroads and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Congress intervened in response to fervent pleas to do so from the administration's then Secretary of Transportation.

In 1986, Congress acted to impose a settlement in the dispute between Guilford Transportation and the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees. We extended the cooling-off period in a dispute in early 1987 involving the Long Island Railroad and its union and we probably would have imposed a legislative solution in that case had not the parties settled at the last minute.

And, as the saying goes, here we go again, as we vote shortly to impose the recommendations of the Presidential Emergency Board upon the parties to this dispute as a labor contract. In effect, we are making the advisory Presidential Emergency Board process one of binding arbitration, after the fact.

Now, I'm not really sure whether or not I like this developing policy. I realize that, as a practical matter, there is sometimes little alternative to doing what we are about to do, and I have sometimes supported and sometimes opposed similar legislation.

But, whether you support or oppose this joint resolution, I hope everyone understands the new policy that is developing, a policy of labor dispute resolution by legislation.

Mr. WHITTAKER. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Porter].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to commend the gentleman from Michigan for bringing this matter to the floor promptly and for his candor and honesty throughout the entire matter from start to finish.

Mr. Speaker, it is now almost 3:30 p.m. Within half an hour or 40 minutes there will be tens of thousands of commuters waiting for the trains in Chicago for the chance to get home.

I will submit my remarks for the Record.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman, my colleague from Illinois on the other side of the aisle, is thinking of objecting to the consideration of this matter at this time. I would only urge the gentleman not to do so, that all that will do is to delay consideration of it and cause hundreds of thousands of people not to be able to get to work to do their jobs and to earn their livings and ultimately the matter will have to be settled in any case by congressional action.

I would urge my colleague not to take that action.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation that will mandate the recommendation of the Presidential Emergency Board to solve the crew consist dispute between the Chicago & Northwestern Transportation Co. [CNW] and the United Transportation Union [UTU].

Labor and management are in disagreement over the number of brakemen needed to operate the CNW freight trains. Collective bargaining was initiated in May 1987 and neither party has been able to reach a satisfactory settlement in almost 18 months of negotiations. In July of this year the Presidential Emergency Board issued its recommendations.

On August 4 when the railroad issued new crew consist rules and labor decided in strike, Congress passed legislation that would extend the cooling-off period for an additional 36 days and keep the freight and commuter trains running. Now that this deadline has expired. Congress is again called on to settle this dispute.

The legislation before this body now is exactly the same as that I introduced before the first strike on August 4. It will protect the public interest and keep the trains running and will prevent commuters being held hostage to a freight dispute.

Certainly no member of this body wants Congress to become involved is settling labor disputes. It is labor's right to strike when they find management rules unsatisfactory. It is a precious right that we value happily in a free society. But there are times, fortunately few in number, when that right crashes aganist the public interest. Unfortunately, this is one of those times when that right must be weighed against the right of tens of thousands of commuters to go to work and earn their living.

Ample time has been given to both parties to negotiate the dispute, but they have failed to reach an accord. The Presidential Emergency Board Recommendations are the views of unbiased experts based on a careful review of the entire dispute and are the only way—fair to both sides—to resolve this matter and lay it to rest. I am pleased that the House is taking up this legislation now and that the right of commuters will be protected. I commend the gentleman from Michigan for bringing this matter properly to the floor and for his candor and honesty in dealing with this matter from start to finish. The gentlemen from Ohio and Kansas have been most diligent as well, and deserve our commendation. I urge that this bill, mandating the provisions of the Presidential Emergency Board, be passed and signed into law.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of this issue for several reasons. One, I do not like this process of collective bargaining. I do not know what is involved in it. Some of these people who are going to be affected in one way or another are constituents of mine, and I want to be in a position to at least explain it to them. I know there are a number of people who are going to lose their jobs. I cannot tell them, and I am going to object to this regardless of what is said.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] objects to the present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

"SEC. 106. (a)(1) The amount of funds provided under the terms of self-determination contracts entered into pursuant to this Act shall not be less than the appropriate Secretary would have otherwise provided for the operation of the programs or portions thereof for the period covered by the contract.

"(2) There shall be added to the amount required by paragraph (1) contract support costs which shall consist of the reasonable costs for activities which must be carried on by a tribal organization as a contractor to ensure compliance with the terms of the contract and prudent management, but which—

"(A) normally are not carried on by the respective Secretary in his direct operation of the program; or

"(B) are provided by the Secretary in support of the contracted program from resources other than those under contract.

"(3) Any savings in operation under a self-determination contract shall be utilized to provide additional services or benefits under the contract or be expended in the succeeding fiscal year as provided in section 8 of this Act.

"(b) The amount of funds required by subsection (a)—

"(1) shall not be reduced to make funding available for contract monitoring or administration by the Secretary;

"(2) shall not be reduced by the Secretary in subsequent years except pursuant to—

"(A) a reduction in appropriations from the previous fiscal year for the program or function to be contracted;

"(B) a directive in the statement of the managers accompanying a conference report on an appropriation bill or continuing resolution;

"(C) a tribal authorization,

"(D) a change in the amount of pass-through funds needed under a contract, or

"(5) may, at the request of the tribal organization, be increased by the Secretary if necessary to carry out this Act or as provided in section 105(c).

Notwithstanding any other provision in this Act, the provision of funds under this Act is subject to the availability of appropriations and the Secretary is not required to reduce funding for programs, projects, or activities serving a tribe to make funds available to another tribe or tribal organization under this Act.

"(c) The Secretary shall provide an annual report in writing on or before March 15 of each year to the Congress on the implementation of this Act. Such report shall include—

"(1) an accounting of the total amounts of funds provided for each program and budget activity for direct program costs and indirect costs of tribal organizations under self-determination contracts during the previous fiscal year;

"(5) the indirect cost pool amounts and the types of costs included in the indirect cost pools;

"(d)(1) Where a tribal organization's allowable indirect cost recoveries are below the level of indirect costs that the tribal organizations should have received for any given year pursuant to its approved indirect cost rate, and such shortfall is the result of lack of full indirect cost funding by any Federal, State, or other agency, such shortfall in recoveries shall not form the basis for any theoretical over-recovery or other adverse adjustment to any future years' indirect cost rate or amount for such tribal organization, nor shall any agency seek to collect such shortfall from the tribal organization.

"(2) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to fund less than the full amount of need for indirect costs associated with a self-determination contract.

"(e) Indian tribes and tribal organizations shall not be held liable for amounts of indebtedness attributable to theoretical or actual under-recoveries or theoretical over-recoveries of indirect costs, as defined in Office of Management and Budget Circular A-87, incurred for fiscal years prior to fiscal year 1988.

"(f) Any right of action or other remedy (other than those relating to a criminal offense) relating to any disallowance of costs shall be barred unless the Secretary has given notice of any such disallowance within three hundred and sixty-five days of receiving any required annual single agency audit report or, for any period covered by law or regulation in force prior to enactment of the Single Agency Audit Act of 1984 (chapter 75 of title 31, United States Code), any other required final audit report. Such notice shall set forth the right of appeal and hearing to the board of contract appeals pursuant to section 110. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to enlarge the rights of the Secretary with respect to section 16 of the Indian Reorganization Act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984; 25 U.S.C. 476).

"(g) Upon the approval of a self-determination contract and at the request of an Indian tribe or tribal organization, the Secretary shall add the indirect cost funding amount awarded for a self-determination contract to the amount awarded for direct program funding for the first year and, subject to adjustments in the amount of direct program costs for the contract, for each subsequent year that the program remains continuously under contract.

"(h) In calculating the indirect costs associated with a self-determination contract for a construction program, the Secretary shall take into consideration only those costs associated with the administration of the contract and shall not take into consideration those moneys actually passed on by the tribal organization to construction contractors and subcontractors.

"(i) Within one month after enactment of this section, the Secretary is mandated to establish a team in each area of the Bureau of Indian Affairs which consists of agency personnel and tribal representatives for the purpose of analyzing the "Indian Priority System" and other aspects of the budgeting and funding allocation process of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for the purpose of making a report to Congress with appropriate recommendations for changes and legislative actions to achieve greater tribal decision-making authority over the use of funds appropriated for the benefit of the tribes and their members. The report along with the analysis, findings and recommendations of the area teams shall be submitted to Congress within six months of enactment of this provision. The Secretary may submit to Congress separate comments on the information and recommendations on the report.".

Mr. UDALL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House amendment to the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Arizona?

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, but I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Mr. UDALL, to explain the request.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1223 is a bill to amend the Indian Self-Determination Act of 1975. The bill passed the House by voice vote on October 27, 1987 and after substantial hearings and revisions by the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, it passed the Senate by unanimous consent on June 7, 1988.

The purpose of the Indian Self-Determination Act is to promote tribal self-government by encouraging tribes to contract for the administration of programs previously administered by the Indian Health Service and the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Many tribes felt that the contracting process needed to be revised and streamlined. It was also felt that such contracts should not be considered as "procurement contracts" but should be viewed as intergovernmental agreements. This is what these amendments accomplish. The bill specifically states that these contracts are not procurement contracts and that except for construction contracts, none of the Federal procurement and acquisitions laws and regulations shall apply to these contracts.

The bill as amended also makes many needed substantive additions and improvements to the original bill.

Today, we are proposing to send the bill back to the other side with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The amendment is mostly a technical rewrite of the Senate amendment. The House amendment also deletes some of the Senate additions which I believe went beyond the scope of the original bill as introduced in the House.

The more important changes made to the Senate amendments by the House amendments are explained below. The reference to the sections are to the sections as numbered in the Self-Determination Act, hereinafter, the act, and not to the sections as numbered in the bill.

Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of section 102 of the act was deleted. This section provided that authorized Indian tribes and tribal organizations were entitled to contract as provided in this section. I am not sure this paragraph was included since other paragraphs in the section already direct the Secretary to enter into such contracts, thereby conferring upon tribal organizations a right to contract under the act. While Indian tribal organizations do have a right to enter into such contracts, the Secretary can always decline to enter into such contracts if he makes a specific finding as provided in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 102.

Paragraph (4) of subsection (a) of section 102 was not amended. Inasmuch as this subsection had been the source of some confusion, it is my understanding that while this subsection allows a tribal organization to consolidate two or more mature contracts into one single contract, it does not anuthorize the tribal organization to reprogram or transfer funds from one contract to another.

While paragraph (2) of subsection (c) of section 102 was deleted, this delection was not made because of an objection to having Federal Tort Claims Act apply to tribal contractors but because it was felt that Federal Tort Claims Act coverage has been adequately addressed by the Interior, Appropriation Committees in their conference report for fiscal year ending September 30, 1989.

Subsection (d) of section 104 was revised to make technical assistance provided by the Secretary in the development of self-determination contracts subject to the availability of appropriations.

Subsections (n) and (o) of section 105 have been deleted. Subsection (n) provided for the payments of additional compensation to Federal employees whose employment was negatively impacted by the issuance of a self-determination contract.

Subsection (o) authorized the Secretary to pay cash bonuses to Federal employees whose positions were terminated because of the issuance of a self-determination contract or who made a contribution toward the successful issuance of a self-determination contract.

It was felt that the benefits to be awarded under subsection (n) were unwarranted and that the lack of standards in subsection (o) opened the subsection for abuse of discretion.

Subsection (a) of section 105 was amended so as to exclude construction contracts from the provision which exempted other types of self-determination contracts from the application of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act and regulations promulgated thereunder. By their nature, construction contracts, unlike other self-determination contracts, are akin to other Federal acquisition contracts and should be subjected to the same types of regulations.

Subsection (a) of section 106 was rewritten so as to delete paragraph (1). This paragraph provided that a self-determination contract shall include all allowable contract costs incurred by a tribal organization in connection with such contract. Instead, the House amendment included a provision which stated that such self-determination contracts shall be funded at an amount which shall be no less than what the appropriate Secretary would have otherwise provided for his direct operation of the program being contracted. In addition, to such amounts shall be added contract support costs.

The new language is identical to a provision which was included in H.R. 1223 as originally passed by the House. The Senate language was deleted because it was felt that such language was more appropriate to define funding for a program rather than a mechanism for the assumption of such program by a tribal contractor.

Subsection (f) of section 106 was deleted. I recognize that improvements need to be made in the administration of the Indian priority system. However, since the committee did not have an opportunity to study implementation of the Indian priority system, I believe that this legislation is not the proper vehicle to address these concerns.

The last sentence of subsection (g) of section 106 was deleted. This sentence provided that if, at tribal option, the amount for direct program funds and the amount awarded for indirect costs on a contract are combined, such combined amount shall be carried in the Secretary's budget at the specific budget location of the contracted program. While unsure about the reason for or the impact of such language, I nevertheless tend to believe that it amounts to an undue invasion of the executive branch's prerogatives.

Paragraphs (2)(A) and (2)(B) of subsection (d) of section 110 were deleted. These sections provided that notwithstanding certain sections of the Contract Dispute Act, tribal contractors were given an option to appeal either to the U.S. district court or to the U.S. court of claims. No good reasons were provided or given to provide tribal contractors with such options and therefore the House amendment deleted such options.

In paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 303, the provision which allowed tribes not to provide the same programs, services, functions or activities as the Secretary would have provided to the tribes and its members was deleted. Under the self-governance project, a tribe is allowed, subject to the funding agreement, to redesign such programs, activities, functions or services and is also allowed to reallocate funds for such programs, activities, functions or services. However, it is not believed that the tribes can use such funds for programs, activities, functions or services which the Secretary himself would not have been authorized to provide or administer had he administered such funds directly.

In paragraph (4) of subsection (a) of section 303, the word "functionally" was deleted. Therefore, under the House amendment, a tribe which entered into a funding agreement authorized under this title shall be eligible to receive in addition to funds which it would have been eligible to receive under contracts and grants under this Act, such funds which are specifically related to the provision by the Secretary of services and benefit to the tribe and it members. However, the tribe will not be eligible to also receive funds which are functionally related to the provisions by the Secretary of such programs, activities, functions or services, whatever such funds might consist of.

Paragraph (6) of subsection (a) of section 303 was deleted and replaced by a new subsection (e) which provided that to the extent feasible, the Secretary shall interpret Federal laws and regulations in a manner that will facilitate the agreements authorized by this title. The Senate language provided for the Secretary to interpret Federal laws in a manner that will not prohibit or restrict such agreements. While a comprehensive survey of the laws which might conflict with or retrict such agreements has not been done, it is my understanding that such agreements will be different from each other. Therefore, each will have to have its legality determined independently.

Paragraph (8) of subsection (a) of section 303 was renumbered as paragraph (9) and amended to provide that in addition to the Senate Select Committee and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, such funding agreements shall also be submitted to each tribe which is served by the agency which is serving the tribe which is a party to the funding agreement.

Subsection (d) of section 303 was rewritten to provide that agreements entered pursuant to this title shall be considered as contracts for the purpose of section 110 of the act. Section 110 outlines appeals rights under the act. The Senate language provided that disputes arising in the course of the negotiation and implementation of agreements shall be resolved pursuant to section 110 of the act. The Senate language was amended because it was felt that section 110 may not be tailored to the resolution of disputes arising during such negotiations. If section 110 does lend itself to such resolution, then its mechanism should be followed. Nevertheless, it was felt that tribal organizations which are entering or have entered into such funding agreements should have as much appeal rights as tribal contractors who are negotiating or have negotiated a contract or grant under the act.

Section 306 was amended so as to give standing to appeal under section 110 of the act to any Indian tribe which alleges that a funding agreement entered pursuant to this title has limited or reduced services, contracts or funds that such tribe was eligible to receive under section 102 of the act.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I thank the chairman, and agree with his explanation. H.R. 1223 passed the House on October 27, 1987, without objection. The other body passed the bill on May 27, 1988, with amendments. The major change in the bill was the addition of an innovative demonstration project for block grants to no more than 20 Indian tribes. This proposal first came from the administration, and I believe with the committee's perfecting amendments, the demonstration projects will be beneficial to the tribes and in our examination of the future relationship with Indian tribes.

I support the further amendments suggested by the chairman and I urge my colleagues to support the motion.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1223.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

GEOTHERMAL STEAM ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1988

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1889) to amend the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970 to provide for lease extensions, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment to the House amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to the House amendments, as follows:

Senate amendment to House amendments: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendments to the text of the bill, insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

Section 6 of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970 (30 U.S.C. 1005) is amended by adding the following new subsections:

"(g)(1) Any geothermal lease issued pursuant to this Act for land on which, or for which under an approved cooperative or unit plan of development or operation, geothermal steam has not been produced or utilized in commercial quantities by the end of its primary term, or by the end of any extension provided by subsection (c), may be extended for successive 5-year periods, but totaling not more than 10 years, if the Secretary determines that the lessee has met the bona fide effort requirement of subsection (h), and either of the following:

"(A) the payment in lieu of commercial quantities production requirement of subsection (i).

"(2) A lease extended pursuant to paragraph (1) shall continue so long thereafter as geothermal steam is produced or utilized in commercial quantities, but such continuation shall not exceed an additional 25 years, for a total of 50 years, if such lease was also the subject of an extension under subsection (c) or an additional 30 years, for a total of 50 years, if such lease is only extended pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(3) If, at the end of either 50-year term referred to in paragraph 2, geothermal steam is being produced or utilized in commercial quantities and the lands are not needed for other purposes, the lessee shall have a preferential right to a renewal of such lease for a second term in accordance with such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems appropriate. For purposes of this paragraph only, the term 'produced or utilized in commercial quantities' means a bona fide sale or the use of geothermal steam by the lessee to generate electricity in marketable quantities.

"(g) To meet the bona fide effort requirements referred to in subsection (g)(1) the lessee must submit a report to the Secretary demonstrating bona fide efforts (as determined by the Secretary) to produce or utilize geothermal steam in commercial quantities for such lease, given the then current economic conditions.

"(i)(1) To meet the payments in lieu of commercial quantities production requirement referred to in subsection (g)(1)(A) the lessee must agree to the modification of the terms and conditions of the lease to require annual payments to the Secretary in accordance with this subsection.

"(2) Payments under this subsection shall commence with the first year of the extension. Payments shall equal to the following:

"(A) In each of the first through the fifth payment years, at least $3.00 per acre or fraction thereof, of lands under lease.

"(3) Failure to make the payments required by this subsection shall subject the lease to cancellation.

"(4) No payments made pursuant to this subsection shall be required after the earlier of the following:

"(A) The date of termination of the lease.

"(B) The date of relinquishment of the lease.

"(C) The date geothermal steam is produced or utilized in commercial quantities from the lease.

"(5) No payments made pursuant to this subsection shall be used to reduce rentals or future production royalties.

"(j)(1) To meet the significant expenditure requirement referred to in subsection (g)(1)(B) the lessee must demonstrate to the Secretary on an annual basis during an extension that a significant expenditure of funds is being made on the lease.

"(2) The following expenditures made by the lessee shall qualify as meeting the requirement of this subsection:

"(A) Expenditures to conduct actual drilling operations on the lease, such as for exploratory or development wells, or geochemical or geophysical surveys for exploratory or development wells.

"(C) Architectural or engineering services procured for the design of generating facilities to be located on the lease.

"(D) Environmental studies required by State or Federal law.

"(4) Failure to make the expenditures required by this subsection shall subject the lease to cancellation.

"(5) No expenditures made pursuant to this subsection shall be required after the date geothermal steam is produced or utilized in commercial quantities from the lease.

"(6) Expenditures made pursuant to this subsection shall be in lieu of any minimum per acre diligent exploration expenditure requirement in effect for the lease at the end of its primary term, or at the end of any extension provided by subsection (c), as the case may be.".

"No more than five years after approval of any cooperative or unit plan of development or operation, and at least every five years thereafter, the Secretary shall review each such plan and, after notice and opportunity for comment, eliminate from inclusion in such plan any lease or part of a lease not regarded as reasonably necessary to cooperative or unit operations under the plan. In the case of a cooperative or unit plan approved before the enactment of the Geothermal Steam Act Amendments of 1988, the Secretary shall complete such review and elimination within 5 years after the enactment of such Act. Such elimination shall be based on scientific evidence, and shall occur only when it is determined by the Secretary to be for the purpose of conserving and properly managing the geothermal resource. Any lease or part of a lease so eliminated shall be eligible for an extension under subsection (c) or (g) of section 6 if it separately meets the requirements for such an extension.".

SEC. 5. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

□ 1530

Mr. RAHALL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from West Virginia to explain what is involved in S. 1889.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of S. 1889 as amended is to provide for the orderly development of Federal geothermal resources, and to ensure the protection of significant thermal features within units of the National Park System from potential geothermal development activities.

As the gentleman is aware, the Senate originally passed the Geothermal Steam Act Amendments of 1988 back in February. The House then substantially modified the Senate bill with language developed by the Mining Subcommittee and passed it on June 13.

In early August, the Senate considered the House version and in consultation with the gentleman from Idaho and myself made some very minor modifications. As such, I am pleased to report to my colleagues that the bill before us is the House version with only a few changes.

These modifications entail a more detailed definition of those items which would qualify under the significant expenditures requirement for a lease extension, and, an identification of specific thermal features within the list of national park units adopted by the House that are the subject of the monitoring and parks protection program established by the legislation.

I might add that we have represented by this bill a dovetailing of interests between the environmental community and the geothermal industry.

Mr. CRAIG. I would like to thank my colleague for that explanation and associate myself with his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 1889, the Geothermal Steam Act Amendments of 1988, as amended by the Senate. This bill is essentially the same as H.R. 2794 that passed the House on June 13, 1988.

This bill allows geothermal resources to be developed while at the same time protecting thermal features within national parks.

This is a bill that benefits both geothermal producers and those who have environmental concerns resulting from geothermal development. I recommend that my colleagues vote to pass S. 1889.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the legislation just considered.

There was no objection.

CONTINENTAL SCIENTIFIC DRILLING AND EXPLORATION ACT

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 52) to direct the cooperation of certain Federal entities in the implementation of the Continental Scientific Drilling Program; with a Senate amendment to the House amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendment.

Senate amendment to House amendment: Page 6, line 8 of the House engrossed amendment, after "paragraph (5)," insert "a report".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my colleague, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL] if he would explain what is involved in S. 52?

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of S. 52 is to provide a national commitment to deep continental drilling by establishing a Continental Scientific Drilling Program that would coordinate the drilling programs of the U.S. Geological Survey, the Department of Energy, the National Science Foundation, and interested universities so as to avoid duplication of effort.

Continental scientific drilling is an important endeavor in that it provides information related to the causes of earthquakes and volcanic eruptions, the occurrence of energy and mineral resources, and other areas of National importance.

It should also be noted that S. 52 is budget neutral in that no appropriation is authorized.

This legislation, originally passed by the Senate, was acted on by the House on May 23, 1988. The Senate subsequently added a two-word technical amendment to clarify one provision of the legislation.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 52, the continental scientific drilling and exploration bill, as amended by the Senate. This bill is essentially the same as H.R. 2737 that was passed as S. 52 by the House on May 23, 1988.

I would like to thank Representative CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER for her foresight in introducing this legislation and Chairman RAHALL for the important work he did in seeing that this legislation becomes law.

I recommend that my colleagues vote to pass S. 52, as amended.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the legislation just considered.

There was no objection.

Conference reports, of course, may be brought up at any time, and a further program may be announced later.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and have asked him to yield just to answer a couple of questions.

On Tuesday, September 13, the gentleman indicated the House will be taking up the conference report on H.R. 4783. Later you indicated that when we come back on Wednesday we will have votes on any suspensions on which votes were ordered on Tuesday, and I wonder if the gentleman could tell us when the House might expect to vote on the conference report to H.R. 4783? Would that be on Wednesday?

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the gentleman for pointing that out. That too will be postponed until Wednesday.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, let me also ask, a number of Members have been concerned about a bill on the Chicago railroad strike. What is the intention of the gentleman in terms of that coming back and the possibility of a vote on that issue?

Mr. FOLEY. We are still discussing that matter in hopes we might renew the request yet this evening.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. When would be the earliest that Members might expect a vote on that issue?

Mr. FOLEY. It could be this evening if we obtain unanimous consent to consider a bill.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. So at what point might Members believe that we are finally through for the evening and safely leave without facing the possibility of another vote?

Mr. FOLEY. We will notify both Cloakrooms. It should be a matter where we will advise the Members on very shortly if there is any opportunity to renew the request.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. If I might pursue that or might inquire of the Speaker, is there a time, say 4 o'clock, or 4:30, or a time when we would be assured that if it has not happened by then it will not happen?

Mr. FOLEY. I would expect that we would notify the Cloakrooms by 4 o'clock as to whether any further action is expected.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. But at this point our Cloakrooms should let Members know that there is still a possibility of a vote this evening?

Mr. FOLEY. Yes. I think as a practical matter it would have to be considered by unanimous consent if it is going to be considered, and if there is any other disposition I think it would be difficult to consider it this evening.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FOLEY. Before the gentleman from Oklahoma leaves the microphone, perhaps as the acting Republican leader I could ask the gentleman to help us advise the Members whether there are any procedural motions expected next Tuesday to discharge any committees or any other procedural motions to be offered on his side?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I can tell the gentleman I am not aware of any at this moment, but there is always that possibility.

I might ask, does the gentleman know of any that might be coming from his side of this aisle?

Mr. FOLEY. We have told the gentleman what we expect in the way of business for the next 4 days, and we would hope in the spirit of comity that for the remainder of the session when the leadership on our side announces the program that we would have the help of the Republican side in advising us of any undertakings that they intend to make on which Members would need to be informed.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I can tell the gentleman that I am not aware of any plans to get any votes at that time. If we in the leadership learn of any, we will be glad to convey that, but I might also add we have been telling our own Members who have the same needs to be back in their districts as the Members on the gentleman's side of the aisle have that they should not expect any votes on Tuesday. So any Member on our side who tries to get any will be doing damage to our colleagues over here as well as to those of the gentleman.

Mr. FOLEY. The gentleman's impression is there will be no such matters raised next Tuesday?

Mr. FOLEY. For the remainder of the week, does the gentleman have any advice he can give me as to motions that may be offered on the Republican side that would draw votes in the House?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I do not know of any. I certainly yield to any of my colleagues who might, but I can tell the gentleman there always remains open the option of continuing to have the kinds of procedural votes that we have in the last couple of days.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, the only thing I am aware of is that we are probably going to continue our effort to discharge the Armed Services Committee on the veto message. But that is something that we have kept the gentleman's side informed of, and I expect that that would be something that would happen as a matter of regular procedure. But I would not expect that to happen, would not expect that to be voted on on Tuesday where the Members have not been given notice of any votes.

Mr. FOLEY. But the gentleman would expect that such procedural motion might well be offered on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week?

Mr. WALKER. I would expect that that will be the case, that some Members probably will offer, probably members of the Armed Services Committee probably will offer a motion.

Mr. FOLEY. Are there any other privileged motions that might draw rollcalls that the gentleman's side knows about that we should be advised of?

Mr. WALKER. We are not aware of anything on Tuesday, and I am not aware of anything that is being planned for any of the other days either. But again, that is just my understanding of the situation.

Mr. FOLEY. We understand that neither side can predict with absolute accuracy what individual Members may do. But we are trying, in the spirit of comity on our side, to advise the House of all pending actions that we know about at this time, and I appreciate the gentleman's willingness to do the same.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1988, AND HOUR OF MEETING ON THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1988

TRIBUTE TO LATE HON. OTTO PASSMAN

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Holloway] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a distinguished former Member of this body, the late Otto Passman, long-time representative of Louisiana's Fifth Congressional District. During Representative Passman's 28-year tenure in Congress, the Fifth District of Louisiana included portions of today's Eighth District—areas of rural Louisiana which experienced great problems. Mr. Passman served his district with great energy and dedication. Today, let us remember his efforts and extend to his family our deepest sympathies on his recent passing.

FEDERAL ENERGY EFFICIENCY AWARD

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Gray] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on October 28, the Federal Government will be awarding the Federal Energy Efficiency Award, and since Congress will be in adjournment on this date, I want to rise now and congratulate Mr. William M. Quinlan for receiving this award. Mr. Quinlan is an air-conditioning mechanic, responsible for the Federal Building in Carbondale, IL, in my district.

William Quinlan's dedication, professionalism and competency enabled him to extend his talents in such a manner as to enhance the heating and cooling efficiency of the facility for which he is responsible. This not only represents a saving to the Government, but it provides for greater efficiency and a more protective environment for the offices and the personnel located in the Carbondale Federal Building. Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful Mr. Quinlans efforts are copied by other federal workers.

As the enclosed documents for the Record verify, William Quinlan personifies the career professional which our Government is seeking and wishing to retain. His contribution demonstrates that our Federal employees are prevailing upon their talents to serve in an exemplary manner the needs of the public.

Section 1. Total Energy Saved. This section identifies the amount of energy saved in FY 1987 as compared to FY 1986, expressed as an absolute amount of energy in BTU's and as an incremental percentage change

Building—FB, Carbondale:

Fiscal year 1986 BTU/GSF	71,721
Fiscal year 1987 BTU/GSF	67,626
Percent (+/−) 1987 versus 1986	(5.7)

Section 2. Description of Actions Taken.

Technical efforts/hardware modifications employed: The Federal Building in Carbondale, Illinois is one of two buildings within Region 5 which has a solar system. This solar system provides heating, cooling, and preheats domestic hot water for the building occupants. The system is a totally hydronic system which incorporates 6,700 square feet of evacuated tube collectors comprising 5,200 individual tubes. This system was designed in 1977.

Mr. Quinlan has maintained the solar system in an excellent state of repair and has operated it in a highly efficient manner. He is the only operating individual at this building. This facility is located approximately 160 miles from the Director of Facilities in Springfield, Illinois.

The biggest obstacle to the efficient operation of this type of solar system is leaks within the solar collector tubes. The presence of leaks within the solar array results in air entering the system and chemically treated water leaving the system. Air within the system reduces heat transfer and could result in air pockets which could cause the solar collector tubes to break. Water leaking from the tubes results in increased water and chemical consumption. The chemicals are used for corrosion control of the piping associated with the solar system. Mr. Quinlan has made a conscientious effort to eliminate leaks from the solar system by replacing leaking headers in the solar array and maintaining the solar tube seals in good condition. Maintaining the solar array is a time consuming task which requires great effort. Mr. Quinlan accomplished this feat while simultaneously providing excellent service to the building tenants.

Mr. Quinlan also investigated and solved a problem with interlocks on the solar water circulating pumps for the rapid heat up control system. The rapid heat up system is used to heat the water in the solar collector water storage tanks. Prior to correcting the problem with the interlocks, the rapid heat up system did not work, and the building was heated with the electric boiler instead of the solar collector tanks. After the interlock problem was solved by Mr. Quinlan, the electric boiler was used less frequently. Approximately 75 percent of the building's heating and cooling requirements are now being met by energy from the sun in accordance with the system design. Before Mr. Quinlan came to this building, only approximately 25 percent of these requirements were provided by solar energy.

Additionally, Mr. Quinlan recalibrated all of the building's pneumatic and electronic controls for the heating, ventilating, and air conditioning (HVAC) system. This action enhanced the ability of the solar system to provide heating and cooling to the building. This action also enabled the HVAC system to provide a comfortable environment for the tenants while simultaneously keeping the temperatures in accordance with GSA's temperature guidelines.

Mr. Quinlan also installed light controllers which activate or deactivate the light in the building's four toilet rooms based on occupancy.

Degree to which nominee got others actively involved: Mr. Quinlan is the only GSA representative assigned to this building. He got the tenants involved in the energy conservation program to help him reduce the building's energy consumption. He has received their cooperation in turning lights off when they leave their offices. Mr. Quinlan also keeps the tenants informed about energy conservation retrofit projects implemented within the building.

Section 3. Project Life. The energy conservation actions identified in Section 2 and their annual savings are expected to stay in effect throughout the lifetime of the installed equipment. Mr. Quinlan's vigilance and expertise will be required to detect and repair any future leaks which may develop in the solar array throughout the remaining life of the building.

Section 4. Transferability. The installation of the light controller and the tenant involvement in the energy conservation program described in Section 2 can be applied to other public buildings throughout the General Services Administration and government-wide. Those actions dealing with the performance of the solar array may potentially be applied to other buildings which utilize solar energy to heat, cool, or provide domestic hot water to the building. Representatives from the Veterans' Administration Hospital in Marion, Illinois have met with Mr. Quinlan and toured the Federal Building in Carbondale, Illinois to observe the operation of the solar system. The purpose of their visit was to determine how they could improve the operation of the solar system located at the Veterans' Administration Hospital complex in Marion, Illinois. Thus, Mr. Quinlan has demonstrated his willingness to share his knowledge and experience with others to benefit the Federal Government.

Section 5. Innovation. The Federal Building in Carbondale, Illinois is an innovative building. It is one of the few public buildings within our nation which obtains energy from the sun to heat, cool, and preheat domestic hot water. Therefore, because this building's mechanial systems are so atypical; Mr. Quinlan must operate and maintain this building unlike the vast majority of public buildings. His innovation and specialized skills are required to operate this facility in a highly efficient manner.

Section 6. Energy Saved Compared To Dollars Spent. Approximately $4,100 have been expended in FY 1987 to accomplish the projects described in Section 2. As a result of Mr. Quinlan's efforts, it is estimated that over $3,400 will be saved annually due to reduced energy, water, and chemical consumption by the Federal Building.

Section 7. Outreach and Education. The Federal Building in Carbondale, Illinois is a solar energy demonstration project. As a result of the unusual features of this building, people have requested tours of the facility. In addition to the representatives of the Veterans' Administration Hospital described in Section 4, Mr. Quinlan has provided tours of the building to students of Southern Illinois University; intellectually gifted students of the Brehm Preparatory School located in the vicinity of Carbondale, Illinois; members of Five Star Industries; Boy Scouts; and Girl Scouts. Mr. Quinlan described the features of the solar system to these individuals and thereby was able to provide them with information about conserving depleting energy sources by utilizing the sun's energy.

Section 8. User Behavior. Mr. Quinlan's efficient operation and excellent maintenance of this building's solar system has had a tremendously positive effect on the 95 tenants which occupy this facility and on the public in Carbondale, Illinois area. As a result of Mr. Quinlan's efforts, the solar system operates properly, energy consumption has decreased, the HVAC system provides a comfortable environment for the tenants, and the leaks in the solar collectors have been repaired. As a result of Mr. Quinlan's interest in the solar system and his achievements, the image and operation of the Federal Building in Carbondale, Illinois has vastly improved in both the eye of the tenants and of the general public.

A POTENTIAL BREAKTHROUGH IN THIRD WORLD DEBT

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, we are now embarking upon the seventh year of the Third World debt crisis and the $30 billion a year in net resource transfers from debtor to industrialized countries continues. Since 1982, economic conditions in most debtor countries have declined substantially as average purchasing power has been slashed and standards of living have fallen precipitously. Moreover, these countries have been required to export much more and import much less from the United States in order to meet their debt servicing obligations. This process has greatly contributed to our record trade deficits.

Despite all their efforts and sacrifice, however, the debt burden of the developing countries has not decreased; rather it continues to grow. Indeed, the two point increase in international interest rates over the past few months will add close to $8 billion to the debt servicing costs of these countries.

Clearly this situation is not sustainable much longer—a blunt message is being sent through the results of the recent Mexican national elections and the ongoing political campaigns in Argentina and Brazil, where opposition-party candidates are currently favored to win the Presidency, largely based on their pledge to remove the debt burden from their countries.

Under these circumstances, it is imperative that the annual meeting of the World Bank and the IMF in Berlin later this month examine new approaches to reducing the devastating burden of Third World debt, which continues to threaten the economic and political stability of developing countries as well as the health of the international trading system. I would hope that discussions will focus on the findings and recommendations of a pathbreaking report recently issued by a distinguished panel of senior bankers and representatives of debtor countries brought together under the auspices of the United Nations Association.

This report is particularly important because it represents, to my knowledge, the first time that major commercial banks—such as Citi-Corp and Chemical Bank—have publicly agreed that debt reduction can be a useful tool in resolving the debt crisis.

Ever since the crisis exploded in August of 1982, debtor nations and creditor financial institutions have been inextricably linked in this web of debt. Since commercial banks used the past 6 years to reduce their exposure and the risk to the world financial system, the time has now come to focus on the other side of the equation—the economies of the debtor countries and the broader consequences for international trade.

But it has taken a long time to get to this point. The initial response of the Reagan administration to the debt crisis was to abandon its policy of relying on the "magic of the marketplace" and to engage in an international effort to manage the crisis. In return for IMF short-term financing, debtor countries were told to reduce trade and fiscal deficits and to implement "market-oriented" economic reforms. According to the theory, creditworthiness would return, capital would again flow "south" and economic growth would resume.

Unfortunately, the scenario was wrong. Instead, output contracted; debt-servicing burdens grew heavier; and financial flows were reversed.

Recognizing that this combination of domestic austerity and a substantial transfer of wealth was both economically and politically unsustainable over the long run, a new and pragmatic Secretary of the Treasury, James Baker, outlined a new and pragmatic plan in October 1985. With a much greater emphasis on growth, the basic objective of the "Baker Plan" was to induce private commercial banks to increase their lending to heavily indebted countries.

The plan met with an enthusiastic response from everywhere except where it counted most—the banks. Additional lending has been extracted by applying great pressure, and usually only when default appeared imminent. Innovative ideas and techniques such as debt-for-equity swaps and zero-coupon treasury bonds have become part of an expanded "menu of options," but they have helped only at the margin.

After 6 years, banks are understandably tired of the endless cycle of negotiations which serve only to push the mountain of debt temporarily forward. Debtor countries no longer see any light at the end of the tunnel. Initiated as a bold new approach, the Baker Plan has been reduced to an exercise in "muddling through," a luxury no longer affordable for fragile democracies with declining standards of living, hyper-inflation, and national elections.

Debt fatigue has set in and we run the risk of allowing events to outstrip our ability to manage this crisis. This is why the analyses and prescriptions outlined by the UNA report are so timely.

The distinguished panel—chaired by Anthony Solomon, former president of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, and Rodney Wagner, cochairman of Morgan Guaranty Trust—has recognized the current deadlock. Their report calls for the consideration of "voluntary debt service reduction" to help relieve the crisis.

The report draws some important conclusions, foremost of which is that "debt service reduction can be a legitimate tool for reducing the resource gap of debtor countries." The approach favored by the panel involves a "debt-for-debt exchange" which would permit banks to swap old debt for new debt at a discount-either reduced principal or lowered interest payments. For those of us who have been engaged in this sometimes acrimonious debate for some years, it is a hopeful sign that such a wide cross-section of participants were able to agree on direction U.S. debt policy should take in the future.

I believe that the principles put forth by this panel are consistent with those that I, and several other Members of Congress have been suggesting. In fact, I would like to take this opportunity to expand upon my previous proposals in light of recommendations made by James Robinson of American Express, Eugene Rotberg of Merrill Lynch, and other experts over the last 18 months.

I believe that the time is right for the establishment of a special facility, affiliated with, and jointly administered by the World Bank and the IMF, in order to implement the orderly reduction of Third World debt.

The primary tasks of the facility would be as follows:

First, to help negotiate on a voluntary, country-by-country basis the transformation of current debt into long-term bonds, freeing countries and creditors alike from the endless cycle of short-term negotiations and reschedulings.

Second, in exchange for agreeing to sell existing loans at a discount, banks would receive a guarantee of both principal and some portion of the interest on the new debt instrument. The extent of the guarantee would be negotiable, perhaps depending upon the size of the discount.

Third, debtor countries would be required to adhere to appropriate conditionality programs. They would have to implement economic policy reforms similar to those currently required for World Bank and IMF loans.

Fourth, in addition, the facility would be encouraged to explore various other innovative debt reduction mechanisms such as debt-for-equity swaps, exit bonds, and the like.

Fifth, funding for the facility would come primarily from countries with sizable trade surpluses. Presumably, most of the money required for the guarantee would take the form of contingent liabilities, given that debt reduction would actually enhance the resources and creditworthiness of debtor countries.

In my opinion, such a facility would be of enormous value in helping to stabilize the political and economic systems of developing countries and promoting more balanced international trading relationships. A separate facility would also accomplish two important goals. First, it would not affect the credit ratings of the multilateral institutions and, second, it would allow the World Bank and the IMF to get back to their original mandate—fostering development.

Clearly, there is a new consensus emerging on what our debt strategy should be and the UNA panel's report adds new momentum to this vital debate. I would hope that Members of Congress as well as officials at the Treasury Department would study the UNA report carefully and that its recommendations will stimulate fruitful discussions at the upcoming meetings in Berlin.

Mr. Speaker, I insert the introduction and conclusions of the report in full in the RECORD:

INTRODUCTION

In January 1988 the Economic Policy Council of the United Nations Association (UNA-USA) invited a distinguished panel of experts to review the international debt situation. Among the panelists and participants were executives of commercial and investment banks, debtor governments and multilateral institutions, legal and accounting firms, and labor unions, as well as members of the press and academe.

It was not the intention of the group to reach agreement on one comprehensive plan or to add to the long menu of debt restructuring options now available. Rather, the panel sought to identify a core set of approaches that best meet the needs of debtor countries, creditor banks, and official institutions. The group met regularly over a period of six months before drafting its final report and recommendations.

Despite the great diversity of interests represented on the panel and many disagreements on specific issues, there was in the end a convergence of views on the nature of the obstacles to a successful resolution of the debt problem and on the general direction future debt policies should take. Not every panel member subscribes to every point in the final report, but its analysis and broad thrust are accepted by the panel as a whole.

The EPC embarked on this project with a sense of urgency, aware that the fragile consensus among debtor countries, commercial banks, and major creditor countries built since 1982 could well fracture and that the costs to both creditor and debtor countries would be high.

Some debtor countries have shown signs of economic recovery, with back-to-back years of substantial growth and increased exports and imports. But all troubled debtor countries remain vulnerable to changes in the world economy. The two percentage point rise in LIBOR[1] since the beginning of this year will add at least $8 billion per year to the debt servicing costs of capital-importing developing countries,[2] and further increases may be in store. Rising commodity prices—one of the sources of inflationary pressures pushing up interest rates—will offset the rise in debt servicing for some countries, but not for all. Recession in the industrial countries could curtail demand for exports of the least-developed countries (LDCs). Further interest increases or a slowing of industrial country growth could make it difficult for even some of the stronger troubled debtor countries to make their payments. The international financial community must prepare for such a possibility.

Even assuming favorable global economic circumstances, the current outlook is for sporadic progress for some debtors, periodic interruption of payments by others, and increasing reluctance on the part of many commercial banks to lend to troubled debtors.

The political climate in some debtor countries is becoming more uncertain. A radicalization of politics revolving around the economy and what to do about the debt is apparent in several countries. Even as these governments are seeking negotiated solutions to their debt problems, they face growing popular frustration with continued austerity and resistance to continuing an accomodative stance toward foreign creditors.

Over time, a situation in which a significant number of countries are in intermittent arrears or on the brink, can undermine the integrity of undercapitalized banks and weaken the fabric of the international financial system as a whole.

Ultimately, the debt is not just a problem for banks and debtors but for the global community. A massive payments imbalance between the United States and other industrial countries has introduced an element of fragility in the world economy. As the industrial countries begin to adjust these imbalances, the unrealized growth potential in the troubled debtor countries takes on much greater significance for the rest of the world.

The global consequences of the Third World's economic strains were held in check to an extent by the strong performance of the U.S. economy after 1982. The industrial countries lost export markets and jobs because of the debt crisis, but strong demand for imports by the U.S. more than offset these losses. U.S. exports to Latin America fell by roughly a fourth after 1982, but the jobs lost were replaced by new jobs created in our domestic sector. The European Community, which exported $20 billion less to Latin America in 1986 than in the peak year 1981, exported $34 billion more to the United States in the same year. Japan exported $1.4 billion less to Latin America but shipped $43 billion more to the United States.

There were opportunity costs associated with the debt crisis: The individuals and companies losing jobs and exports were not always those benefiting from U.S. growth;[3] unemployment might have been lower and growth higher in Europe if demand had been stronger in developing countries. Nevertheless, the economic reversal in the Third World was not as sharply felt in the industrial countries in this decade as it might have been had the U.S. economy grown more slowly and pulled in fewer imports.

It was U.S. demand, of course, that helped some developing countries generate the large surpluses that enabled them to service their debts despite sharply diminished capital inflows. While most of these trade surpluses were a consequence of sharply curtailed imports, Latin America has increased exports to the U.S. while exports to Europe and Japan in the period 1985-87 dropped.

This could all change as the U.S. comes to grips with its own debt problem. A reduction in U.S. demand will almost certainly be necessary to shrink its trade and payments deficit, and unless this is offset by a corresponding rise in European and Japanese demand—an uncertain prospect—developing countries will find it more difficult to maintain the level of exports necessary to service their debt.

At the same time, Third World markets will become more important for industrial countries: Increased demand for imports by developing countries can be a much needed stimulus to global growth. But Brazil, Mexico, the Philippines, et al. cannot act even as a small "locomotive" until their debt problem is eased. The economic self-interest of the developed countries is therefore to be counted among the compelling reasons for seeking more rapid progress on the debt front.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

1. We urge the governments of the major financial centers to exert strong leadership on the debt issue and to move decisively to forge a consensus among the key players on a set of approaches that not only preserves a stable banking system but allows the debtor countries to resume stable growth and economic development benefiting all their people. Current policy has so far failed to achieve the second of these goals in most cases.

Strong official leadership is necessary, not to substitute public funds for private credit, public risk for private risk, but to restore a sound and sustainable credit relationship between debtor countries and the international financial markets. There are vital economic and political, as well as financial, issues at stake.

Banks and debtors are open to new approaches to the debt problem. But the industrial countries and, to a degree, the official multilateral institutions as well have sometimes failed to encourage—indeed, on occasion, have resisted—the trend toward flexibility and the search for innovative solutions to the debt problem.

2. The panel strongly supports the emphasis given by creditor governments, official institutions, and banks to the need for structural reforms in debtor countries. Virtually all suggested debt plans require that debtor countries reform various segments of their national economies. There was no serious disagreement among panel members on this point: Domestic reforms are the key to sustained economic recovery for even the most troubled debtor countries.

Any easing of the debt burden by external measures without parallel domestic efforts will yield only temporary relief: The additional resources freed up for domestic use are likely to be squandered or redeployed abroad through capital flight, eventually resulting in a new debt crisis.

3. The panel recognizes that the current gap between debt servicing outflows and financial inflows from all sources—commercial banks, official lenders, and direct investors—may be too great for some debtor countries to bridge even with effective economic reforms. And indeed, heavy external debt servicing requirements may create conflicting economic and political pressures that make the adoption of fundamental reforms extremely difficult—or, if undertaken, can overwhelm the potential benefits. Under these circumstances, creditor banks and governments must act in concert to help close the gap.

4. The panel very strongly urges the U.S. Congress to approve the U.S. contribution to the World Bank's General Capital Increase and encourages expanded and more imaginative use of co-financing and parallel financing techniques by the World Bank and regional development banks to catalyze the aggregate flow of new funds.

5. For the reasons outlined in the report, large new lending programs may be difficult to secure under current market conditions. The panel believes that voluntary debt service reduction should be pursued as a serious alternative or complement to more lending. It may be the only alternative for many smaller debtors that have already been written off by the banks. But this approach, alone or in combination with other measures, may also be an effective technique for easing the financial constraints on larger debtors.

Despite the losses entailed, debt service-reduction transactions can have considerable benefits for creditor banks as well, if the asset transformation or exchange enhance the quality of their loan portfolios.

Debt service-reduction schemes should be supported by creditor governments, bilaterally or multilaterally. Although the panel thinks a government buy-up of sovereign commercial debt is neither necessary nor desirable, it believes that government support for debt service-reduction transactions between debtors and commercial lenders can be catalytic. Official banking, perhaps including partial official guarantees, would lead to much wider use of this approach and would enhance its effectiveness as a tool for solving the debt problem. Governments also need to implement more compatible and consistent supervisory rules to facilitate a resolution of the debt situation.

6. Concerns have been raised that debt service reduction in any form would discourage future lending. On the contrary, most panel members believe: If debt service reduction is carried out cooperatively and voluntarily through negotiation and mutual agreement by the principal parties, and has the desired effect not only of reducing outstanding claims against the country but of aiding economic recovery, then "credit-worthiness" will come sooner rather than later.

COMMUNICATION FROM CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET REGARDING CURRENT LEVEL OF SPENDING AND REVENUES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1989

(Mr. DERRICK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the Record and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Chairman William H. Gray III, pursuant to the procedures of the Committee on the Budget and section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, I am submitting for printing in the Congressional Record the official letter to the Speaker advising him of the current level of spending, credit, and revenues for fiscal year 1989. This is the first comprehensive report for fiscal year 1989 in the second session of the 100th Congress.

The term "current level" refers to the estimated amount of budget authority, outlays, credit authority and revenues that are available—or will be used—for the full fiscal year in question based only on enacted law.

Current level reports are intended to provide Members information to compare enacted spending and revenues with the aggregate ceilings on budget authority, outlays, and revenues established in a budget resolution, and also to compare enacted legislation with the allocations of new discretionary budget authority, entitlement authority, and credit authority made to a committee pursuant to subsection 302(a) of the Budget Act. This report compares the spending, credit, and revenue levels in current level with those assumed in the budget resolution for fiscal year 1989, (H. Con. Res. 268), adopted on June 6, 1988.

Current level reports provide information that is necessary for enforcing section 311 of the Budget Act. Subsection 311(a) prohibits the consideration of a spending or revenue measure if the adoption of that measure would cause the ceiling on total new budget authority or total outlays set in the budget resolution for a fiscal year to be exceeded or would cause revenues to be less than the appropriate level of revenues set in the budget resolution.

Subsection 311(b) provides an exception to the 311(a) point of order for measures that would breach the ceilings on total spending set in the budget resolution but would not cause a committee to exceed its "appropriate allocation" of discretionary spending authority made pursuant to section 302(a) of the Budget Act. Such an exception was first provided by the budget resolution for fiscal year 1985. (House Concurrent Resolution 280, 98th Congress). The exception was made permanent by the amendments to the Budget Act included in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings). This exception is intended to protect a committee that has stayed within its allocation of discretionary budget authority and new entitlement authority from points of order if the total spending ceilings have been breached for reasons outside of its control. For fiscal year 1989, the 320(a) allocations to House committees made pursuant to the conference report on House Concurrent Resolution 268 were printed in House Report 100-662, June 1, 1988.

[3] Statistics published by the U.S. Bureau of Labor, for example, show a net reduction in manufacturing sector jobs from June 1981 through June 1988, alongside substantial gains in most other sectors over the same period. (See Employment, Hours and Earnings: U.S. 1901-84, Volumes I and II, March 1985, Bulletin 1312-12 and The Employment Situation: June 1988, July 1988, Table B-1.)

Section 311(c) of the Budget Act provides that, for purposes of enforcing section 311, the levels of new budget authority, entitlement authority, outlays, and revenues shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committee on the Budget. Current level reports represent partial fulfillment of this enforcement responsibility of the Budget Committee by providing both estimates of enacted aggregate spending and revenues, and, for purposes of determining the applicability of the section 311(b) exception, estimates of the relationship between the budgetary effect of enacted legislation within a committee's jurisdiction and the allocation of spending authority made to that committee.

The estimates in this report are based on economic and technical assumptions in place at the time of the adoption of the budget resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 268, on June 6, 1988. This is intended to protect committees which acted on the basis of the assumptions of the budget resolution from changes in economic and technical factors over which they have no control. Unless the Congress adopts a subsequent budget resolution for a fiscal year that alters the assumptions about legislative actions, committees should be able to expect that measures that conform with the budget resolution will not be subject to points of order for violation of the Budget Act. To do otherwise and base enforcement on constantly changing economic and technical estimates would seriously disrupt the legislative process, penalize committees that are unable to complete work on legislation within a short period after adoption of a budget resolution, and undermine respect for budget enforcement procedures.

In addition to section 311, the Budget Act contains another point of order that requires Budget Committee estimates for enforcement. Section 302(f)(1) of the Budget Act prohibits the consideration of a measure providing new budget authority, new entitlement authority, or new credit authority if the adoption of that measure would cause a committee to exceed its allocation of new spending or credit authority made pursuant to subsection 302(b) of the Budget Act. The 302(b) allocation is a subdivision of the new spending, new entitlement, and new credit authority allocated to a committee pursuant to section 302(a), among either the subcommittees of that committee or among programs over which the committee has jurisdiction. This point of order was added to the Budget Act by the amendments included in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

Section 302(g) provides that the enforcement of section 302 shall be based on estimates of spending and credit authority made by the Committee on the Budget. The Budget Committee fulfills this responsibility by providing, as necessary, a separate section 302 status report to the Speaker.

For information purposes only, current level reports will continue to include a comparison of the budget and credit authority divided among the appropriations subcommittees by that committee's 302(b) division with the actual enacted spending and credit legislation within each subcommittee's jurisdiction.

As chairman of the Budget Process Task Force, and on behalf of Chairman GRAY, I intend to keep the House informed regularly on the status of the current level.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 7, 1988.

Hon. JAMES C. WRIGHT, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On January 30, 1976, the Committee on the Budget outlined the procedure which it had adopted in connection with its responsibilities under Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, to provide estimates of the current level of revenues and spending.

I am herewith transmitting the status report under H. Con. Res. 268, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1989.

In the House of Representatives, the procedural situation with regard to the spending ceilings (total budget authority and total outlays) is affected by section 311(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended by Public Law 99-177. Enforcement against possible breaches of the spending ceilings under 311(a) of the Budget Act would not apply when a measure would not cause a committee to exceed its "appropriate allocation" of "new discretionary budget authority" or "new entitlement authority" made pursuant to Section 302(a) of the Budget Act. It should be noted that under this procedure the committee's outlay allocation is not considered.

The intent of Section 311(b) of the Budget Act is to protect a committee that has stayed within its spending authority allocations—discretionary budget authority or new entitlement authority—from points of order if the total spending ceilings have been breached for reasons outside of its control. The 302(a) allocations to House committees made pursuant to the conference report on House Concurrent Resolution 268 were printed in H. Rept. 100-662 (June 1, 1988).

The enclosed tables compare enacted legislation to each committee's 302(a) allocation of discretionary budget authority, new entitlement authority, new direct loan obligations and new primary loan guarantee commitments. The estimates of spending and revenues for purposes of the application of points of order under the Budget Act are based upon the economic and technical assumptions underlying the fiscal year 1989 budget resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 268.

The Energy and Commerce Committee and the Ways and Means Committee have exceeded their targets because of the enactment of Public Law 100-360, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. The Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for fiscal year 1989 assumed enactment of such legislation but made no allocations for it. The House report on the Budget Resolution explained that such legislation, if deficit-neutral, would be appropriate even though it exceeded the Resolution's Section 302 allocations or spending aggregates.

Revenues exceed the revenue floor established by the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 1989 for two reasons. First, the Budget Resolution assumes $350 million in revenue losses from the Omnibus Trade bill (enacted) and the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement which is not yet enacted and therefore not reflected in the current level. Second, the enactment of Public Law 100-360, The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, increasing revenues, was assumed in the Budget Resolution but not reflected in the revenue floor. The Budget Resolution assumed deficit-neutral catastrophic health legislation, but not a specific dollar amount. As explained in the House report on the Budget Resolution, the revenue increase in Public Law 100-360 was intended to offset and make deficit neutral the multiyear spending in that bill. Therefore, it would not be consistent with the assumptions in the Budget Resolution to enact additional revenue-losing legislation.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM H. GRAY III,
Chairman.

REPORT TO THE SPEAKER OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FROM THE COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET ON THE STATUS OF THE FISCAL YEAR 1989 CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ADOPTED IN H. CON. RES. 268—REFLECTING COMPLETED ACTION AS OF AUG. 11, 1988

BUDGET AUTHORITY

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and that exceeds $403,787 million in budget authority for fiscal year 1989, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of budget authority for that year as set forth in H. Con. Res. 268 to be exceeded.

OUTLAYS

Any measure providing budget or entitlement authority which is not included in the current level estimate and that exceeds $242,566 million in outlays for fiscal 1989, if adopted and enacted, would cause the appropriate level of outlays for that year as set forth in H. Con. Res. 268 to be exceeded.

REVENUES

Any measure that would result in a revenue loss which is not included in the current level estimate and that exceeds $404 million in revenues for fiscal year 1989, if adopted and enacted, would cause revenues to be less than the appropriate level for that year as set forth in H. Con. Res. 268.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4586) making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

ITEMS OF GENERAL INTEREST

Foreign Currency Fluctuation.—The conferees are concerned with the excessive burden being placed on military construction and family housing accounts as a result of foreign currency fluctuation. The conferees have included $70,829,000 to help alleviate the immediate shortfall due to currency fluctuation. The conferees however are displeased that the Department has not requested foreign currency fluctuation funds but instead requested large increases in overseas construction. Thus, the conferees have reduced overseas construction to help alleviate the current shortfall.

The conferees also agree that no more than five percent of the fiscal year 1989 funds for projects within the United States can be deferred for purposes of funding foreign currency shortfalls.

With regard to the Senate report language dealing with increased contributions by the government of Japan, the conferees support constructive negotiations to that end. However, the conferees do not agree at this time that projects in Japan should be cancelled unless the government of Japan agrees to finance all negative variances caused by the yen-dollar exchange rate. The conferees believe that much of the problem with currency shortfalls can be avoided if a more realistic or more likely conversion rate is used. The Department should reflect the most appropriate rate in the fiscal year 1990 budget.

Exercise-Related Construction.—The conferees have agreed that $4,000,000 for the Army, $1,000,000 for the Navy and $2,000,000 for the Air Force in the respective unspecified minor construction accounts be available, if required, for exercise-related construction outside the United States.

The conferees are displeased that the Department has not requested specific line item funding for exercise-related construction as previously directed. Therefore, no fiscal year 1989 funds shall be obligated for exercise-related construction until the Department formally notifies the Committees on Appropriations that a specific line item for exercise-related construction will be included in the Defense Agencies fiscal year 1990 budget.

Philippines—Various Projects.—The conferees have agreed to funding of $70,290,000 of the requested $81,400,000 for Navy and Air Force military construction and family housing projects in the Philippines. The conferees continue to recognize the importance of the United States military presence in the Philippines; however, there is concern with the apparent negotiating posture of the Philippine Government regarding possible unreasonable concessions in exchange for base rights. Therefore, the Department is directed to defer obligation of funds until such time as the Secretary of Defense has provided to the Committees on Appropriations a report on the status of base rights negotiations and a certification that based on the negotiation status, it is prudent to proceed with the projects.

Ground Launched Cruise Missile and Pershing II Bases.—The conferees are concerned with the future use of Cruise Missile and Pershing II bases which will be vacated under the terms of the INF Treaty. Therefore, the Department is directed to provide a report to the Committee by March 15, 1989 which outlines the future use of these installations.

Construction Agency.—The conferees question whether financial economies and construction execution enhancements could be derived if the Air Force were to act as its own construction agent. The Department should review the feasibility of the Air Force assuming such responsibility and advise the Committees on Appropriations of its findings by December 1, 1988.

Medical Facilities.—The conferees are concerned that Defense Medical Facilities Office (DMFO) budget submissions may not reflect the priorities of the individual military services. While the DMFO should continue to be the lead agency for Department-wide medical policy, the conferees are concerned that program budgeting and execution of medical facilities may be sacrificed because of competing demands in the Defense Agencies budget. Therefore the Secretary of Defense should reconsider whether it is still appropriate to program medical facilities in the Defense Agencies budget or include the projects in the individual military Services budget and report the Department's findings and recommendations to the Committees on Appropriations by January 30, 1989.

Biennial Budget.—The conferees agree with the Senate report language regarding biennial budgeting for military construction and family housing. Experience has demonstrated that two-year line item budgeting is impractical and misleading and should be limited to one year. Therefore, the conferees direct that the construction Annex (C-1) and forms DD 1391 in support of the next budget submission will provide line item detail and justification for projects requested for fiscal year 1990, and that any information submitted for subsequent years will be aggregated at the appropriation account level.

Family Housing—Construction Improvements.—The conferees are concerned about the lack of consistency and different approaches to repair and improvement of family housing facilities adopted by each of the Services. Therefore, the Department is directed to develop uniform standards and criteria for the "whole-house" concept of upgrading existing housing facilities. In addition, the Department together with each of the Services is directed to develop a master plan which lays out the maintenance, repair and improvements requirements for existing units and the timeframe over which that plan would be accomplished. This study should be submitted to the Committees on Appropriations by March 1, 1989.

General and Flag Officer Quarters.—The conferees are concerned about the large number of out-of-cycle notifications that continue to be submitted for maintenance and repair of general and flag officer quarters. Therefore, each Service is directed to limit its notification submission to one per year except those situations which are considered emergency or safety related.

Computer Simulated Design.—The conferees direct the Air Force to do a study that compares the estimates developed from parametric cost modeling system with estimates developed based on 35 percent design status.

Matters Addressed by Only One Committee.—The language and allocations set forth in House Report 100-620 and Senate Report 100-380 should be complied with unless specifically addressed to the contrary in this conference report and statement of the managers. Report language included by the House which is not changed by the report of the Senate or the conference, the Senate report language which is not changed by the conference is approved by the committee of conference. The statement of the managers, while repeating some report language for emphasis, does not intend to negate the language referred to above unless expressly provided herein.

Conforming Authorization.—The conferees direct the Department to submit, at the earliest possible time, a supplemental authorization request which conforms to the projects funded in this Bill.

Program, Project, and Activity.—For purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (Public Law 99-177) as amended by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987 (Public Law 100-119), the term "Program, Project, and Activity" will continue to be defined as the appropriation account, consistent with the definition as stated in the fiscal year 1988 conference agreement.

The conferees direct that the Committees be notified 21 days prior to the proposed deferral or cancellation of any project resulting from a sequestration order. In addition, the Department is to submit a report within three months of a sequestration order showing how the reductions have been applied to affected line items and projects. Reductions to projects will not affect the reprogramming base.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, ARMY

Amendment No. 1. Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $927,292,000 for Military Construction, Army instead of $877,630,000 as proposed by the House and $924,551,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Arizona—Fort Huachuca: Test and Evaluation Center.—The conferees note that each Committee has provided appropriations for this project due to the relationship of the facility to the losses incurred from the fire at Fort Huachuca in July, 1987. The conferees agree that there is authority for this project in existing statute and, as a result, have not provided a separate line item in the fiscal year 1989 Authorization Act.

The conferees feel that the provision of the direct funding in this bill, along with the confirmation of authorization, removes any hindrance from the Army accomplishing this project as planned. The Army is therefore directed to proceed with this project with all possible haste.

Arizona—Fort Huachuca: Headquarters Addition.—The conferees have agreed with Senate report language directing the Army to provide $620,000 through unspecified minor construction for construction of a new headquarters building addition.

Arizona—Fort Huachuca: Replacement of Destroyed Facilities.—The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to analyze the storage and administrative support deficit created by the catastrophic fire at Fort Huachuca on July 5, 1987, and to include construction funds for replacement facilities in the fiscal year 1990 budget request.

Hawaii—Kapalama Military Reservation.—The conferees will expect the Department to delay any further public sale of lands at the Kapalama Military Reservation until the legitimate interests of the State of Hawaii in acquiring this land have been addressed.

Utah—Tooele Army Depot: Ammunition Demilitarization Facility.—The conferees have agreed to provide construction funding of $49,600,000 for this project. Any funding request in fiscal year 1990 and future years for construction of demilitarization facilities should be requested in the military construction budget for the purposes of assuring that the current plan for site-specific destruction of weapons is maintained. In addition, the conferees believe the Army is premature in selecting the disassembly disposal concept for use at all disposal sites prior to the operation of the first full-scale plant at Johnston Atoll. The conferees agree that cryofracture offers the possibility of significant cost savings. The Army is therefore directed to proceed expeditiously to design and construct a full-scale cryofracture facility. The conferees believe full scale operational verification of both approaches is necessary and construction at mixed munition sites, other than Tooele Depot, should be minimized until verification is complete.

Germany—Hohenfels: Combat Maneuver Training Center Facilities.—The conferees have agreed to provide funding of $35,500,000 for various facilities at Hohenfels, including family housing. The funding is provided with the understanding that the German Army will only use the training area terrain and not the Combat Maneuver Training Center Facilities.

Germany—Various Sites: Wartime Host Nation Support.—The conferees have agreed to funding of $5,000,000 for Wartime Host Nation Support operations facilities. The conferees disagree with the Department that this commitment should be a United States responsibility but understand that the cost-sharing requirement is part of a bilateral agreement and have agreed to funding only for that reason.

Germany—Vilseck: Post Office.—The conferees agree that the Post Office project at Vilseck should be downscoped if necessary to be funded under minor construction.

Honduras—Palmerola: Upgrade Facilities Site 5.—The conferees have agreed to funding in the amount of $3,050,000 requested to upgrade facilities at Palmerola. However, no funds should be obligated until the next Administration certifies its position on funding of this project by April 15, 1989. In addition, the conferees agree to the fiscal year 1988 reprogramming request of $4,600,000 contingent upon the same certification by the next Administration.

Amendment No. 2. Earmarks $95,000,000 for study, planning, design, architect and engineer services instead of $98,328,000 as proposed by the House and $91,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 3. Deletes language proposed by the Senate which earmarks $36,529,000 to be available for research and development-related facilities and equipment.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, NAVY

Amendment No. 4. Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $1,576,516,000 for Military Construction, Navy instead of $1,591,850,000 as proposed by the House and $1,565,318,000 as proposed by the Senate as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $1,576,516,000, of which amount, $38,080,000 for the TACAMO mission shall not be available for obligation or expenditure before October 15, 1988, and, of the amount appropriated, funds allocated for homeporting at Everett, Washington may be obligated and expended for any homeporting military construction activity at that installation, except actual dredging and disposal of contaminated sediment, and that such funds may be expended for actual dredging and disposal of contaminated sediments once requirements of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act have been satisfied,

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have agreed to the following additions and deletions to the amounts and line items as proposed by the House:

Alaska—Naval Air Station Adak: Dependent Schools............................	+$23,000,000
California—Naval Air Station North Island: Maintenance Hangar................	−5,710,000

Alaska—Naval Air Station Adak: Dependent Schools.—The conferees have agreed to funding of $23,000,000 for a 200 student school at Naval Air Station Adak, rather than $29,000,000 for a 400 student school as requested. This reduction is based upon reduced enrollment and lower than anticipated student/family housing unit ratio, which together eliminate the requirement for approximately 17,000 square feet of school space. However, the modified design should allow for future expansion.

California—Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton.—The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to report to the Committees by November 15, 1988 on the site selection process for construction of approximately 1,750 housing units at Camp Pendleton on currently leased land. Plans and alternatives to provide the housing without disturbing prime agricultural land should be addressed. In addition the report should include actions taken, and planned, to meet the concerns of the entire agricultural community.

California—Naval Station Treasure Island San Francisco: Industrial Support Complex.—The conferees have agreed to funding $5,000,000 for the Industrial Support Complex at Treasure Island. However, no funds may be obligated until the Navy submits a report on alternative strategic homeporting of the U.S.S. Missouri.

California—San Diego Naval Regional Medical Center.—The conferees direct the Department to report to the Committees on Appropriations by December 1, 1988 on the status of resolving the parking problems at this hospital.

Hawaii—Naval Station Pearl Harbor: Ford Island Causeway.—The conferees have been advised of the Navy's interest in negotiating an agreement with the State of Hawaii, whereby the State would fund and construct for the Navy a causeway between mainside Pearl Harbor and Ford Island, Hawaii. This project would provide much needed access to Ford Island and allow for its proper development. The Navy would, in turn, convey certain lands to the State which would no longer be required due to the causeway construction. Navy facilities on the lands no longer required would also be replaced by the State. This project would be accomplished at no cost to the Navy, and would be of great benefit to both the State and the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy should advise the Committees of the results of such negotiations.

Washington—Naval Station Everett: Carrier Support Complex (Increment IV).—The conferees have provided $38,400,000 for the strategic homeporting project at Everett, Washington. The conferees are concerned that judicial disputes over the procedures followed in the issuance of dredging and other permits have resulted in a stop and start pattern for construction of aspects of the homeport not directly related to the dredging question. Debate over the meaning of earlier restrictions on Everett funding has been a contributing factor to this situation, which has resulted in delays and added costs to the taxpayer.

The conferees remain committed to making certain that necessary dredging is conducted in a manner consistent with proper environmental considerations. To this end, the Navy is encouraged to continue its efforts to resolve these issues as expeditiously as possible. However, construction, including the carrier pier, that is necessary for the homeport, but not impacted by a final decision on how to deal with contaminated dredge sediments, should not be subject to the changing tides of conflicting judicial interpretations. Therefore, the Navy is directed to utilize the funds provided in fiscal year 1989 to execute this construction consistent with the phased funding direction provided in the fiscal year 1988 Continuing Resolution conference report, in order to complete the homeport in a cost effective manner.

Italy—Naval Support Activity Naples: Command Control Communications and Intelligence Complex, Phase I.—The conferees have agreed to funding $21,600,000 for relocation of a portion of the Navy Complex at Agnano to Capodichino Airport. Prior to obligation of funds, the Secretary of Defense is directed to report to the Committees on Appropriations the United States proposals for the use of all the Ground Launched Cruise Missile sites in Europe. The report is to also include how the funds will be utilized and what facilities will remain at Agnano together with the Navy's plans for relocation of the school. In order to provide funding for this project, the conferees have agreed to apply a general reduction of $21,600,000 to the overall Navy construction account.

Panama—Naval Station: Special Warfare Unit.—The conferees have denied funding of this project because of lack of authorization. However, because this project is considered to be one of high importance, the Department is directed to submit a reprogramming request under 10 U.S.C. 2803 Emergency Authority.

Philippines—Navy Public Works Center Subic Bay: Power Plant.—The conferees understand that over $20,000,000 of the $27,770,000 for this project is for generators which can be relocated if necessary. Because of the long-lead time for procurement of such generators, the conferees have no objections to early obligation of funds; however, for the construction portion of the project, obligation of funds should be contingent on certain conditions being met as cited earlier in this statement.

Various Locations—Land Acquisition.—The conferees have agreed to funding $36,895,000 as requested for land acquisition, provided that no funds in this Bill shall be expended by the Navy for the purchase of land in McIntosh County, Georgia.

Amendment No. 5. Earmarks $129,000,000 for study, planning, design, architect and engineer services instead of $138,276,000 as proposed by the House and $120,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Planning and Design.—The conferees agree with Senate report language which earmarks funds in the amount of $300,000 for initiation of a replacement for a breakwater and for dredging of the San Jose Harbor on Tinian Island in the Northern Marianas Islands.

Amendment No. 6. Deletes language proposed by the Senate which earmarks $27,784,000 to be available for research and development-related facilities and equipment. The conferees have taken this position for jurisdictional reasons. However, the conferees understand the project for the large cavitation channel at Memphis, Tennessee will be fully funded in the Defense Appropriations Bill.

Amendment No. 7. Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

COAST GUARD SHORE FACILITIES

For construction, rebuilding and improvement of shore facilities of the United States Coast Guard, $50,300,000 to remain available until September 30, 1993.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have agreed to provide $50,300,000 for shore facilities of the Coast Guard as proposed by the Senate. This action is taken without intent to set precedent for future funding of Coast Guard facilities. Following is a list of projects to be accomplished with these funds:

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION, AIR FORCE

Amendment No. 8. Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $1,225,926,000 for Military Construction, Air Force, instead of $1,293,406,000 as proposed by the House and $1,227,599,800 as proposed by the Senate as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment insert: $1,225,926,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The conferees have agreed to delete language proposed by the Senate that earmarks $12,800,000 for a construction project at Scott Air Force Base. However, funding for this project is included in the line item detail shown below. The conferees have agreed to the following additions and deletions to the amounts and line items as proposed by the House:

California—George AFB, Various Projects.—The conferees have provided funds for three projects as requested for George AFB. However, the funds may not be obligated until the Committees on Appropriations receive a report that outlines the method by which the United States Government will be reimbursed for facility construction used to support training of foreign military or civilian personnel at George AFB. The report should include any documentation of funds currently being collected from foreign countries together with plans to increase payments based on availability of newly constructed facilities.

California—Palmdale (AF Plant 42) Access Road.—The conferees have not included funds for an access road to Air Force Plant 42 due to lack of authorization. However, the conferees believe the requirement is valid and urgent. Therefore the Department is directed to immediately submit an emergency reprogramming request for the Palmdale Access Road under authority provided in 10 U.S.C. 2803.

California—Vandenberg AFB: Titan IV Launch Pad.—The conferees support the Senate report language which directs the Air Force to provide the Committees on Appropriations with a report by December 15, 1988, on the extent and value of potential incompatible development rights, including a proposal for assuring land use in the surrounding area is fully compatible with SLC-7 mission profiles. The conferees have agreed to defer funding the initial phase of a new Titan IV launch complex, due to lack of authorization. This reduction is made in belief that it is impractical to construct 34 projects (which includes projects funded in fiscal year 1988) at the same time at Whiteman AFB. Prior to obligation of fiscal year 1989 funds for construction, the Air Force is to report to the Committees on Appropriations which projects will be deferred as a result of the reduction.

Texas—Lackland AFB: DLI-Language Training Laboratory.—The conferees have agreed to funding of $10,000,000 for this project as recommended by the House, which is $2,000,000 below the President's request. With over 75 percent of the student population coming from other countries, the conferees feel strongly that the foreign countries should, at least, pay for $2,000,000 of the $12,000,000 programmed cost. Prior to obligating funds for the Language Training Laboratory, the Department is to report to the Committees on Appropriations proposed plans for sharing of costs for this project.

Warren AFB pending approval on deployment of the system by the next Administration and the Congress. However, the conferees feel that planning for these projects should proceed at a moderate pace so as to not exceed 35 percent design status until the Administration and the Congress have approved deployment of the system.

Japan—Yokota AB: Control Tower Cab.—The conferees have denied funding for the Control Tower Cab and recommend that the project be constructed utilizing unspecified minor construction funds.

Portugal—Lajes Field: Transient Dormitory.—The conferees have deferred funding of this project without prejudice. However, the Department should consider submitting a reprogramming request for this project utilizing funds from savings.
